"THE DEATH DIAMONDS," BY EMMA HOWARD WIGHT, NEXT WEEK.

THE CHICAGO LEDGER

VOL. XXXI, NO. 38. CHICAGO, ILL., SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1903. SINGLE COPY 5 CENTS.

The Blazed Trail;

Or, Struggling for Gold.

BY STEWART EDWARD WHITE.

SYNOPSIS OF THE BLAZED TRAIL.

John Rodway, a lumberman, makes a contract with Morrison & Daly, a big lumber firm, to cut certain timber in northern Michigan. The contract was a tricky document, the exact terms of which were interpreted to suit Daly. When Rodway attempted to collect his money the contract was shown, and he was on the verge of bankruptcy when he was saved by the good business sense of Jim Scott, a young lumberman. Scott had the lumber rights to adjoining timber, and a young man who had been suddenly thrown upon his own resources by family misfortune, and who had decided to try his luck in the northern woods as a logger after the Rodway deal was settled up. Thorpe decided to try a deal on his own book. He located a great claim on the shores of Lake Superior. While boasting the claim he met a friendly Indian and a tech young man who was in the North Being. A big fires was threatening timber in that region, and when they started Thorpe was there to locate a claim and they started on to Detroit to register their claim to it, and Thorpe started out for the same purpose.

(Copyright, 1902, by Stewart Edward White.)

CHAPTER XIV.

PUTTING UP A BLUFF.

Thorpe arrived out of breath at a typical little mill town consisting of the usual unpainted houses, the saloons, mill, office, and general store. To the latter he addressed himself for information.

The proprietor, still sleepy, was mopping out the place.

"Does that boat stop here?" shouted Thorpe across the suds.

"Sometimes," replied the man, somnolently.

"Not always?"

"Only when there's freight for her."

"How does she know when there's freight?"

"Oh, they signal her from the mill"—but Thorpe was gone.

At the mill Thorpe dove for the engine room. He knew that elsewhere the clang of machinery and the hurry of business would leave scant attention for him. And besides, from the engine room the signals would be given. He found a Scotchman in charge.

"Does the boat stop here this morning?" he inquired.

"Well," replied the engineer with fearful deliberation, "I canna say. But I have received no orders to that effect."

"Can't you whistle her in for me?" asked Thorpe.

"I canna," answered the engineer, promptly enough this time.

"Why not?"

"Ye're na what a body might call freight."

"See here," replied Thorpe, "I've got to get that boat. It's worth twenty dollars to me, and I'll square it with the captain. There's your twenty."

The Scotchman chuckled and pocketed the money.

"I'll doottin' that's in order," he replied. "I'll be no party to any such proceedin's. I'm goin' noo for a fresh pail of water," he remarked, pausing at the door, "but as a wee item of information: yander's th' wheestle rope, and a toot blaws three short and one long for th' boat."

He disappeared. Thorpe seized the cord and gave the signal. Then he ran hastily to the end of the long lumber docks and peered with great eagerness in the direction of the black smoke.

The steamer was as yet concealed behind a low spit of land which ran out from the west to form one side of the harbor. In a moment, however, her bow appeared, followed directly by the rest of the Straits of Mackinaw. When opposite the little bay with a grand free sweep she turned and headed for the mill.

He negotiated briefly with the captain, paid him twenty dollars, and was given the privilege of landing at Mackinaw City. Then he slept for eight hours on end and was awakened in time to drop into a small boat which deposited him on the broad sand beach of the lower peninsula.

The train was just leisurely making up for departure. Thorpe, dressed as he was in old "pepper and salt" garments patched with buckskin, his hat a flopping travesty on headgear, his moccasins dirty, his face bearded and bronzed, tried as much as possible to avoid attention. He sent an instant telegram to Wallace Carpenter conceived as follows:

"Wire thirty thousand my order care Land Office, Detroit, before nine o'clock tomorrow morning. Go to it if you have to rustle all night. Important."

Morning came at last, and the train drew into the depot at Detroit, and stopped. Thorpe, being in the smoking car, dropped off first and stationed himself near the exit where he could look over the passengers without being seen. They filed past—he was only he could accord the role of master lumbermen, and in these two Thorpe recognized Daly and Morrison themselves. They passed within ten feet of him, talking earnestly together. At the curb they hailed a cab and drove away. Thorpe with satisfaction heard them call the name of a hotel.

At nine o'clock neither of the partners had appeared. Thorpe entered the land office and approached the desk.

"Is there a telegram here for Harry Thorpe?" he inquired.

The clerk to whom he addressed himself merely motioned with his head toward a young fellow behind the railing in a corner. The latter, without awaiting the question, shifted comfortably and replied:

"Yes."

At the same instant steps were heard in the corridor, the door opened, and Mr. Morrison appeared on the sill. Then Thorpe showed the stuff of which he was made.

"Is this the desk for buying Government lands?" he asked, hurriedly.

"Yes," replied the clerk.

"I have some descriptions I wish to buy in."

"Very well," replied the clerk, "what townships?"

Thorpe detailed the figures, which he knew by heart, the clerk took from a cabinet the three books containing them, and spread them out on the counter. At this moment the bland voice of Mr. Morrison made itself heard at Thorpe's elbow:

"Good morning, Mr. Smithers," it said, with the deliberation of the consciously great man. "I have a few descriptions I would like to buy in the northern peninsula."

"Good morning, Mr. Morrison. Archie there will attend to you. Archie, see what Mr. Morrison wishes."

The lumberman and the other clerk consulted in a low voice, after which the official turned to Smithers among the records. Not finding what he wanted, he approached Smithers. A whispered consultation ensued between these two. Then Smithers called:

"Take a seat, Mr. Morrison. This gentleman is looking over these townships, and will have finished in a few moments."

Morrison's eye suddenly became uneasy.

"I am somewhat busy this morning," he objected, with a shade of command in his voice.

"If this gentleman?" suggested the clerk, blandly.

"I am sorry," put in Thorpe, with brevity, "my time, too, is valuable."

Morrison looked at him sharply.

"My deal is a big one," he snapped. "I can probably arrange with this gentleman to let him have his farm."

"I claim precedence," replied Thorpe, calmly.

"You will have to await your turn, Mr. Morrison," said the clerk, virtuous before so many witnesses.

The business man was in a white rage of excitement.

"I insist on my application being filed at once!" he cried, waving his check. "I have the money right here to pay for every acre of it; and if I know the law, the first man to pay takes the land."

He slapped the check down on the rail, and hit it a number of times with the flat of his hand. Thorpe turned and faced him with a steel look in his level eyes.

"Mr. Morrison," he said, "you are quite right. The first man who pays gets the land; but I have won the first chance to pay. You will kindly step one side until I finish my business with Mr. Smithers here."

"I suppose you have the amount actually with you?" said the clerk, quite respectfully; "because if you have not, Mr. Morrison's claim will take precedence."

"I would hardly have any business in a land office if I did not know that," replied Thorpe, and began his dictation of the description as calmly as though his inside pocket contained the required amount in bank bills.

Thorpe's hopes had sunk to zero. After all, looking at the matter dispassionately, why should he expect Carpenter to trust him, a stranger, with so large a sum? It had been madness. Only the blind confidence of the fighting man led him farther into the struggle.

The clerk marked across each square of his map as Thorpe read them, the date and the purchaser's name.

At length the task was finished. It became necessary to type duplicate lists of the descriptions. While the somnolent youth finished his task, Thorpe listened for the messenger boy on the stairs.

A faint slam was heard outside the rickety old building. Hasty steps sounded along the corridor. The landlooker merely stopped the drumming of his fingers on the broad arm of the chair. The door flew open and Wallace Carpenter walked quickly to him.

Thorpe's face lighted up as he rose to greet his partner. The boy had not forgotten their compact after all.

"Then it's all right?" queried the latter breathlessly.

"Sure," answered Thorpe, heartily, "got 'em in good shape."

At the same time he was drawing the youth beyond the vigilant watchfulness of Mr. Morrison.

"You're just in time," he said, in an undertone. "Never had so close a squeak. I suppose you have cash or a certified check; that's all they'll take here."

"What do you mean?" asked Carpenter, blankly.

"Haven't you that money?" returned Thorpe, quick as a hawk.

"For Heaven's sakes, isn't it here!" cried Wallace, in consternation. "I wired Duncan, my banker, here last night, and received a reply from him. He answered that he'd see to it. Haven't you seen him?"

"No," repeated Thorpe, in his turn.

"What can we do?"

"Can you get your check certified here near at hand?"

"Yes."

"Well, go do it. And get a move on you. You have precisely until that boy there finishes ticking that machine. Not a second longer."

"I can't you get them to wait a few minutes?"

"Wallace," said Thorpe, "do you see that white-whiskered old lynx in the corner. That's Morrison, the man who wants to get our land. If I fail to plank down the cash the very instant it is demanded, he gets his chance. And he'll take it. Now, go. Don't hurry until you get beyond the door; then fly!"

Thorpe sat down again in his broad-armed chair and resumed his drumming. The nearest bank was six blocks away. He counted over in his mind the steps of Carpenter's progress; now to the door, now in the next block, now so far beyond. He had just escorted him to the door of the bank, when the clerk's voice broke in on him.

"Now," Smithers was saying, "I'll give you a receipt for the amount, and later will send to your address the title deeds of the descriptions."

Carpenter had yet to find the proper official, to identify himself, to certify the checks, and return. It was hopeless. Thorpe dropped his hands in surrender.

Then he saw the boy had two typed lists before his principal, and dimly he perceived that the brush, shamefacedly, was holding something bulky toward himself.

"Wh—what is it?" he stammered, drawing his hand back as from red-hot iron.

"You asked for a telegram," said the boy, stubbornly, as though trying to excuse himself, "and I didn't just catch the name, anyway. When I saw it on those lists I had to copy. I thought of this here."

Where'd you get it?" asked Thorpe, breathlessly.

"A fellow came here early and left it for you while I was swearing out," explained the boy. "Said he had to catch a train. It's yours all right, isn't it?"

"Oh, yes," replied Thorpe.

He took the envelope and walked unconcernedly to the tall window. He looked out at the chimneys. After a moment he tore open the envelope.

"I hope there's no bad news, sir," said the clerk, startled at the appearance of the face Thorpe turned to the desk.

"No," replied the bandmaker. "Give me a receipt. There's a certified check for your money."

CHAPTER XV.

Next day the articles of partnership were drawn; and Carpenter gave his note for the business agreement. Then, in answer to a penciled card which Mr. Morrison had evidently left at Thorpe's hotel, the partners and young men called at the lumberman's place of business. They were ushered immediately into the private office.

Mr. Morrison was a smart little man with an incisive manner and a fishy eye. He greeted Thorpe with marked geniality.

"My agreement is ready," he cried, jocularly. "Sit down, Mr. Thorpe! Although you did not come out of the band I made every preparation to purchase, I can't but admire your grit and resourcefulness. How did you get free of me?"

"I walked across the upper peninsula and caught a boat," replied Thorpe, briefly.

"Indeed, indeed!" replied Mr. Morrison, placing the tips of his fingers together. "Extraordinary! Well, Mr. Thorpe, you overreached us nicely, and I suppose I must ask for our release. We must have that pine, even though we pay stumpage on it. Now, what would you consider a fair price for it?"

"It is not for sale," answered Thorpe.

"We'll waive all that. Of course it is to your interest to make facilities and rates for us as low as high as you can. But my time is somewhat occupied just at present, so if you'll be very fair with me and name price; we will come to an agreement afterwards."

"You do not understand me, Mr. Morrison. I told you the pine is not for sale, and I mean it."

"But surely—what did you buy it for, then?" Mr. Morrison began, with evidences of a growing excitement.

"I bought it to manufacture it."

"Very well," cried Morrison, so suddenly in a passion that Walker, who was in the room, could not be still you this, young man, or we'll not be any concern and we're an old one. We'll show you like that!" He crushed an envelope vindictively, and threw it in the waste-basket.

"Crush ahead," replied Thorpe, with great good humor. "Good-by, Mr. Morrison," and the two went out.

Wallace was sputtering and trembling with nervous excitement. His was one of those temperaments which required action to relieve the stress of angry interference. He wanted to do something at once. "Hadn't we better see Sheaver, or teleped little creek in the hardwood. There he attended diligently to the business of tripping. Thorpe rarely found time to visit him, but he often glided into the office, smoked a pipeful of the white man's tobacco in friendly fashion by the stove, and glided out again without having spoken a dozen words.

Wallace made one visit before the big season came, and was charmed. He ate with gusto of the "salt horse," baked beans, stewed prunes, mince pie and cakes. He tramped around gaily in his moccasins on the fancy snowshoes he promptly purchased of Indian Charley. There was nothing new to report in regard to financial matters. The loan had been negotiated easily on the basis of a mortgage guaranteed by Carpenter's personal signature. Nothing had been heard from Morrison & Daly.

By the end of the winter some four million feet of logs were piled in the bed or upon the banks of the stream. To understand what that means, you must imagine a pile of solid timber a mile in length. This tremendous mass lay directly in the course of the stream. When the water should be up, it had to be separated and floated piecemeal down the current. The process is an interesting and dangerous one, and one of great delicacy. It requires for its successful completion picked men of skill, and demands as toll its yearly quota of cripples and dead. While on the drive many men threescore hours a day, up to their waists in water filled with floating logs.

On the Osawinamakee, as has been stated, the season had been timed to accomplify the process of driving. When the logs were in their distribution, the gates were raised, and a head of water set the floated them down.

Now, the river being navigable, Thorpe was possessed of certain rights on it. Technically, he was entitled to a certain head of water, whenever he needed it; or a special head, according to agreement with the parties using the river. Early in the drive, he found that Morrison & Daly intended to cause him trouble. It was the first season of the river between high, rocky banks. Thorpe knew that his dam would be soon close-packed. The situation was ticklish. Men with spiked boots run here and there from one boiling mass to another, pushing with their peaveys, hurrying one log, retarding another, prodding like beavers to keep the whole mass straight. The entire surface of the water was practically covered with the floating timbers.

In a moment, as though by magic, the loose section began grand toppling. A log in advance up-ended; another thrust under it. The whole mass ground together, stopped and began rapidly to pile up. The men engaged in the drive in a marvelous manner of their own.

Tim Shean found that the gate at the dam above the head on the dam. The log in charge had simply obeyed orders. He supposed M. & D. wished to back up the water for their own logs.

Tim indulged in some picturesque language.

"You ain't got no right to close off more'n enough to leave us th' natr'al flow unless by agreement," he concluded, and opened the gates.

Then it was a question of breaking the jam. This had to be done by pulling out or chopping through certain "key" logs which locked the whole mass. Men stood under the face of the jam with axes, and with a frowning sheer wall of bristling logs, behind which pressed the weight of the impounded waters—and hacked and tugged calmly until the mass began to stir. Then they escaped.* A moment later, with a roar, the jam vomited down on the spot where they had stood. It was dangerous work. At least one half day later it had to be done again, and for the same reason.

This time Thorpe went back with Stesier. No one was at the dam, but the gates were closed. The two opened them again.

They overtook a man rode up on horseback inquiring for Mr. Thorpe.

"I am he," said the young fellow.

The man thereupon dismounted and served a paper. It proved to be an injunction issued by Judge Sherman enjoining Thorpe against interfering with the property of Morrison & Daly, until certain dams erected at designated points on the Osawinamakee. There had not elapsed sufficient time since the commission of the offense for the other firm to secure the issuance of that interesting document, so it was at once evident that the whole affair had been prearranged. After serving the injunction the official rode away.

"Of all the consummate gall!" exploded Thorpe. "Trying to enjoin me from touching a dam when they're refusing me the natural flow! They must have bribed the fool judge. Why, his injunction isn't worth the powder to blow it up!"

"Then you're all right, ain't ye?" inquired Tim.

"I'll be the middle of summer before we get a hearing in court," said he. "Oh, they are a cute layout! They expect to hang me up until it's too late to do anything with the season's output."

He arose and began to pace back and forth.

"Tim," said he, "is there a man in the crew who's afraid of nothing and will obey orders?"

"A dozen," replied Tim, promptly.

"Who's the best?"

"Scotty Parsons."

"Ask him to step here."

In a moment the man entered the office.

"Scotty," said Thorpe, "I want you to understand that I stand responsible for whatever I order you to do."

"Yis, sorr," said Thorpe, "you take two men and build some sort of a shack right over the sluice-gate of that second dam. I want You to live there day and night. Never leave it, not even for a minute. The contract will you grub. Take this Winchester. If any of the men from up-river try to go out on the dam, you warn them off. If they persist, you shoot at them. If they keep coming, you shoot at them. Understand?"

"You bet," answered Scotty, with enthusiasm.

Another installment of this truthful and exciting story of life in the logging and lumber trade will be given Ledger readers in next week's Ledger. Every regular subscriber to the Ledger is offered cameras and patterns free as announced on pages thirteen and fifteen.

The Rose and the Lily.

In the long, long ago, so they tell me,
Dwelt a rose in a garden fair and free,
There grew a sweet, modest, white lily
And a homely, old-fashioned white rose.

And they both loved the amorous West Wind,
And why, I'm sure nobody knows,
And the Wind was in love with the lily
That grew by the homely white rose.

In the night came the amorous West Wind,
Confused by the dark, I suppose;
And the kiss that was meant for the lily
Was pressed on the lips of the rose.

And ever since then, so they tell me,
Wherever a sweet garden grows,
There's a paleness of grief o'er the lily,
And a blush on the face of the rose.

MR. STESLER'S DIVERSION

BY CLARA NOUTON.

Mr. Stesler sat back with a hearty dinner, grumbling and discontented. He gazed morbidly down the path leading to the road. Finally, I'm absolutely certain, Bess, that I'd extend both arms to welcome even a book agent or a peddler in the driving rain.

"You talk foolishly, George. Be thankful that you are not an invalid."

"But I say this is a hermit's life."

"Won't you your cigar and a good digestion?"

"Oh, I know all that. But I want a little change, a little diversion. Why, I tell you," he exclaimed savagely, "if the veriest hoodlum from the streets of Chicago had blundered in with ropes and leg-irons to make him a captive I would have welcomed him with joy."

"Would you really resort to such extremes after a hearty dinner?"

"Oh, don't mind what I say. I'm close-packed. The situation was ticklish. Men with spiked boots run here and there from one boiling mass to another, pushing with their peaveys, hurrying one log, retarding another, prodding like beavers to keep the whole mass straight. The entire surface of the water was practically covered with the floating timbers.

In a moment, as though by magic, the loose section began grand toppling. A log in advance up-ended; another thrust under it. The whole mass ground together, stopped and began rapidly to pile up. The men engaged in the drive in a marvelous manner of their own.

Tim Shean found that the gate at the dam above the head on the dam. The log in charge had simply obeyed orders. He supposed M. & D. wished to back up the water for their own logs.

Tim indulged in some picturesque language.

"You ain't got no right to close off more'n enough to leave us th' natr'al flow unless by agreement," he concluded, and opened the gates.

Then it was a question of breaking the jam. This had to be done by pulling out or chopping through certain "key" logs which locked the whole mass. Men stood under the face of the jam with axes, and with a frowning sheer wall of bristling logs, behind which pressed the weight of the impounded waters—and hacked and tugged calmly until the mass began to stir. Then they escaped.* A moment later, with a roar, the jam vomited down on the spot where they had stood. It was dangerous work. At least one half day later it had to be done again, and for the same reason.

This time Thorpe went back with Stesler. No one was at the dam, but the gates were closed. The two opened them again.

They overtook a man rode up on horseback inquiring for Mr. Thorpe.

"I am he," said the young fellow.

The man thereupon dismounted and served a paper. It proved to be an injunction issued by Judge Sherman enjoining Thorpe against interfering with the property of Morrison & Daly, until certain dams erected at designated points on the Osawinamakee. There had not elapsed sufficient time since the commission of the offense for the other firm to secure the issuance of that interesting document, so it was at once evident that the whole affair had been prearranged. After serving the injunction the official rode away.

"Of all the consummate gall!" exploded Thorpe. "Trying to enjoin me from touching a dam when they're refusing me the natural flow! They must have bribed the fool judge. Why, his injunction isn't worth the powder to blow it up!"

"Then you're all right, ain't ye?" inquired Tim.

"I'll be the middle of summer before we get a hearing in court," said he. "Oh, they are a cute layout! They expect to hang me up until it's too late to do anything with the season's output."

He arose and began to pace back and forth.

"Tim," said he, "is there a man in the crew who's afraid of nothing and will obey orders?"

"A dozen," replied Tim, promptly.

"Who's the best?"

"Scotty Parsons."

"Ask him to step here."

In a moment the man entered the office.

"Scotty," said Thorpe, "I want you to understand that I stand responsible for whatever I order you to do."

"Yis, sorr," said Thorpe, "you take two men and build some sort of a shack right over the sluice-gate of that second dam. I want You to live there day and night. Never leave it, not even for a minute. The contract will you grub. Take this Winchester. If any of the men from up-river try to go out on the dam, you warn them off. If they persist, you shoot near

A Daughter of Jezebel;

Or, THE BLACKMAILERS OF GOTHAM. By T. C. Harbaugh.

(Copyright by W. D. Boyce Co.)

Begun in No. 36, Sept. 5. Subscriptions can begin with that issue, or back copies can be procured from news stands, or our agents, or by mail from office of publication.

CHAPTER IX.

CHESTER BLAIR TAKES THE TRAIL.

In Hester France the nabob of Wall Street had encountered a woman of vast resources for evil. Cool and calculating, fair and captivating, she let nothing stand between her and the goal of her ambition. Unscrupulous with a heed for planning deep schemes, a wayward child, who early in life had broken from a mother's influence, she had thrown herself upon the world to make her way through it as suited her fancy.

She was the occupant of the house on Black street, that building in which Holton Clinch had encountered Luke Jarndyce, and, suspecting that the millionaire's mansion there would give her an opportunity to carry out a diabolical plot, she had let nothing stand in the way of it.

From the next room, through the medium of a crack in the partition, she had witnessed the entire scene between the two men and had heard every word that had fallen upon the slightest thing that would give her power over Clinch, she had let escape her notice. Of this Chester Blair had seen Holton Clinch and knew him for one of the money kings of the country, hence her great joy when things turned out to her liking.

She felt that she had the man in her evil clutches. She knew that Stanley Gordon had long contemplated feathering his own nest by schemes as wicked as her own, and the trivial concluded to work together for the gold alone, the other for gold and a wife.

Lucille's happiness did not count with these two people. They did not stop to consider the young girl's happy days at the mansion on Murray Hill, but, pushing ahead in their plans, they intended to overcome any obstacle aside and at last fill their purses at the office of plunder and even life taking.

The balking of Hester's second attempt to blackmail Holton Clinch through Lucille's interference did not stop the daughter of Jezebel for a moment. To abandon the plot never met utter defeat in her mind, but extorted five thousand dollars from the nabob and the wife of Hester's mind was a bagatelle.

The scene at the mansion only infuriated her against Lucille. It was Hester's work which had driven Mrs. Clinch from home, for she had sent her a letter in which she told not only hinted of dark things, but cunningly put her before that what her husband was alive and in the city. This was enough to bring about the disagreement by which the reader already knows; it drove Ethel Clinch from home, sending her out into the world if not to the grave at an early age. To fall from her high estate in society to be pointed at as a woman who had two living husbands, was more than enough to unsettle the poor woman's mind and separate her from her child.

On the other hand, the care with which Holton Clinch guarded what he called his "financial honor" made a coward of him from first to last. He was willing to sacrifice everything to keep "in the swim" on Wall Street. Had he defied the plotters at once at the first he would have broken their shafts and their schemes would have fallen harmless, but, coward-like, he trembled in the shadow of the exposure which he felt certain Hester and Stanley could bring about, and, by capitulating too long, he lost his chances.

He now dared not accept Chester Blair's offer to become his champion. The young lawyer would have thrown himself into the battle and perhaps through him the blackmailers could be brought to the bar of justice, but that would necessitate the unraveling of his meeting with Luke Jarndyce, and bring about a situation in which Hester and he co-plotter held over his head an ever-ready club.

But Chester Blair, when he quitted the millionaire's private office, had made up his mind.

Lucille had to be saved even at the expense of her foster father's honor, and when he admitted to himself that he had some sacred scruples to deal with.

He would employ no detectives. Chester had but little faith in the average sleuth; already in his short career he had had experience with such people, and many he had found unreliable.

He would take up the matter himself. If he found he would have no one to blame but himself. And so he went to work at once.

He soon learned from Lucille's own lips the story of her last interview with the millionaire. Yes; she had offered to marry Stanley Gordon in order to save Holton Clinch's honor. But at the same time the fair girl hoped that something would turn up in time to prevent that sacrifice.

"Something shall turn up to save you!" cried Chester. "I am your friend to the battle. You will trust me, dear?"

"In everything," was the reply. "And I will aid you in every way in my power; but those people are armed in some manner and are wholly unscrupulous."

"We will break their power. This woman whom you ejected from the house is a veritable fiend, fair though she be. But what is the hold they have on Mr. Clinch?"

"It must be something dreadful," said Lucille, with a perceptible shiver.

"Not so bad as he thinks, perhaps. He may have overestimated their power for evil. I will see this woman. I will drag from her her infamous secret, no matter what it is—"

"She will meet you with the courage of a tigress and the subtlety of the serpent."

"So much the better. That will give me a foe worthy of my steel. The harder she fights the more courage it will give me."

"But beware of the pair; they are desperate."

Stanley Gordon comes for his answer tonight, I believe?"

"So father says."

"Will he come here?"

"That I do not know."

"When he comes he will receive an affirmative answer from Mr. Clinch?"

"Yes; unless something turns up."

An hour later Chester Blair might have been seen entering a woman who stood for a few moments on a street corner as if waiting for some one.

From the description of Hester France given by Lucille he believed he was watching that very person. When she started off she had him at her heels and he followed her up to Black street.

"So that is your nest, my fair bird," said the young man as he noted the house where he saw down already. Well, tonight I will let Stanley Gordon play his card while you are likely to have a wait.

It was not long till dusk. The shadows of night quickly descended and the pair that Chester Blair stood before the brick house in the rear of Holton Clinch's mansion on Murray Hill.

He knew her name, for Lucille had told him, and when he rang he asked for her at the door.

"Second door to the left, third floor," was the reply he got, and a moment later he was ascending the stairs.

The house was still and apparently uninhabited. No one met him as he went up, and in a few moments he stood before the designated portal.

For a little while he listened; but not a sound came from the room beyond. Over the transom above the door a light was shining to indicate that the chamber was tenanted, and, using his knuckles, he rapped loudly, closer to the portal in order to be ready to throw himself into the room should the person who might come to the door bid him admittance.

A minute passed before the young man heard anything and then the door opened.

Before him stood a woman, and as she came before him, a man whose face was pale and drawn, whose eyes almost protruded themselves in their sockets and whose figure was gaunt and haggard-looking.

He had come to ask for admittance, but threw himself across the threshold, and, turning, faced the man in the hall that had prevailed.

A woman in the deep sockets fairly flashed.

"Who are you?" demanded the occupant of the room. "What business have you in this house? Go at once, or—scream!"

Chester uttered a cry. Was this man Lucille's father?

CHAPTER X.

THE HAND OF A DEMON.

Chester Blair of course knew nothing of Holton Clinch's encounter with the man called Luke Jarndyce in that same house. He was further from knowing that Hester France and Stanley Gordon had on the same floor with them the man who had left this same man for dead on the floor, nor could he have told him that Jarndyce's body lay in the morgue.

Had he known these things he might have considered the man before him as a startling mystery and secret, if not in actual connection with them.

He knew that Mrs. Clinch's former husband had left the impress of himself in the rings of his death in the South, hence her marriage to Holton Clinch.

But not a thought of the presence of a man who had announced that he was the "real" Clinch, "dead" though he was said to be! The dead do not come back from the vast unknown. Once there they remain cast down upon mortality that is the last of flesh.

No wonder Chester Blair stepped when the name was spoken by the man at the speaker. There was a strange, insane look in the eyes before him, and Jarndyce, if the man was really that person, trembled with a superstitious fear of him.

Finally Blair recovered his self-possession.

"If you are Luke Jarndyce," said he, "you are the very man I want to see."

There was no answer, but a quick movement forward and before Chester Blair could escape the iron arm shot out like an arrow and he felt a grip on his shoulder.

"You want to see me, eh?" laughed the other. "You want to drag me into the courts again, do you?"

Before Chester could reply the door flew open and he turned to stand face to face with a woman whose face was white as a sheet, whose baleful eyes was the rage of a basilisk's.

Could this woman be the one he had followed to the house, the person whom he had intended to face and accuse her of bloodmail if not other crimes? Surely, she must be Hester France.

In a second all doubts were dissipated, for the woman, striding forward, covered the lover with a quivering finger while words of momentous import leaped from her venous:

"Fool! What brought you to this house? Can't you see that for you this is the house of death? I know you. You are Chester Blair, and your mission is not only the spy's, but the villain's as well. Think you that after what you have seen and heard, you will be permitted to walk away with the secret which is ours? You are from this moment dend to the world, dead to it forever!"

"And you—"

"I am executioner!"

Blair noted the growl that came from the man's throat. He saw Jarndyce edge around him until they stood face to face with, but a step between. What would the man do? In Jarndyce's eyes there was now the unmistakable glare of the maniac. Was Jarndyce Hester's prisoner? Was this combination of villainy and lunacy in thrall while she worked her diabolical spell on Holton Clinch?

Thoughts passed with lightning rapidity through Blair's brain.

Hester stood between him and the door, her supple figure a barricade which even with his strength he could not hope to break.

Was it strange that he heard the trip-like beating of his own heart—a frenzied wooing between his head and his breast—a panic in his front?

"You have played the wrong card," went on Hester, speaking coolly now. "Fool! You have carried the game of the spy a little too far, and you have got your reward. I open the door for you. It is the house of death for Chester Blair."

Suddenly, in responsete a motion by Hester, the door swung forward and, as before Chester could throw up his hands was upon him like a wild beast.

Lucille was borne backward against the wall and pinioned there by the iron arms of the man Jarndyce.

He heard Hester France laugh.

"That is the way to deal with Jarndyce; "this man has come to drag you into court, and you know what that means. Kill him! Kill him at once!"

In vain did Chester try to shake off that fatal embrace. He saw the flashing knife into his throat; he felt the fetid breath of the maniac on his face and caught the white froth that dripped over the maniac's bearded lips.

But he struggled with all his might.

"That's right," continued Hester, with the fury of a fiend in her tones. "Make a play off the old scores now and forever. Six years ago you helped to—no matter, you robbed you of your wife!"

Blair saw the knife was raised.

He knew that he was Blair could barely see the inflamed face and the maniacal eyes of Hester now, though the room was full of light. Everything else was swallowing before his disordered senses; his head was reeling, he was rushing streets and lava-like; he was being choked to death by the hands of Jarndyce there was no escape.

"Kill, kill, kill!" cried the daughter of Jezebel. "Do it now! Do it now! Do it until the truth. That's right. This man must not—for he is from—from you!"

These were the last words Blair heard. They seemed to reach his ears from far away like the shrieks of the damned, and suddenly everything, especially the lights, swam and died out, then he knew that all darkness swooped down upon him.

Could he have looked through that pall of insensibility and noted what happened next he would have seen the maddened standing in the middle of the room regarding his victim's spasmodically and laughed as if inspired by the infernal fiend.

Near by stood Hester France, the old fiend that had supervised the whole crime and her gaze riveted upon the figure lying on the floor.

Jarndyce seemed ready to again launch himself upon their victim for he looked at Hester for orders, but the latter held him up her hand in refusal.

"Easy, easy, my work well," said he. "You have prevented them from getting hold of Blair. He was their spy. You are worth your weight in gold."

"Yes, yes; I am safe; ha, ha!" laughed the man, and he clapped his hands with his hands. They will not get me now. They will not send me to Sing Sing where they send are."

The mind of the poor mad wretch, whom Hester France had made her tool had gone back to the yellow scourge of the South, to the days when he was a victim of fever, hauled out and thrown into nameless graves.

Hester laughed with him, but hers was a laugh of triumph and as it rang through the room Jarndyce joined in until the echoes were the height of malignity.

"Now, come," said the woman. "Pick him up. I'll show you where to put him."

The madman darted at Chester Blair and lifted him from the floor.

In another moment the room was quite deserted and the pair threaded the gloomy halls of the house.

A few minutes later they came back and Hester closed the door with a click.

But instead of taking it, he turned upon her and laughed with all the power of a fiend.

"Bit down! They will hear you!" cried the woman.

"I like to laugh. I heard them laugh down in the "beautiful place" where I lay in the South. Who are you? Why are you here? Have you come to take me away and throw me before the courts? I'll kill you like I killed him, and—"

No wonder Hester France's face lost every vestige of color.

The madman was now beyond control. He did not recognize her, but on the contrary regarded her as his enemy. He came forward with eyes aflame and hands clinched. Froth crept from his ashen lips and dripped over his chin. Hester, breathless, shrank to the wall and shivered.

It was her turn now to feel those terrible fingers and as Jarndyce advanced she felt her heart stand still.

CHAPTER XI.

LUCILLE SHOWS HER SPIRIT.

No man ever waited more eagerly for night than did Stanley Gordon who was to receive Holton Clinch's answer to his momentous question. That night he would know his fate and he did not doubt the result of the meeting with the millionaire. The man was in his power and Hester's. He dared not refuse to give him the beautiful Lucille; he was on the brink of social ruin and no one realized this more fully than the nabob himself.

The darkness came all too slowly for the plotter. He took dinner at his club some time. That woman was amply able to take care of herself, but he knew nothing of what was passing in the house on Black street, if he would have sent Hester France face to face with a madman, he would perhaps have gone to her relief.

But he selected hour when Gordon mounted the steps of the house on Murray Hill. He had selected that hour, for he felt that Holton Clinch had employed a detective to watch his movements, and the last thing that had not as yet reached the millionaire's knowledge, the sleuth had taken the money and left for the South.

Thus the man of Wall Street was in the blackmailer's power. He was about to be surrounded by a ring of fire from which, no matter which way he turned, there was no escape.

Stanley was ushered into the mansion by a servant and conducted to the study of Holton Clinch, a little paler than usual, and covered with the dust of the city streets. The clock on the stroke of ten soon afterward announced the arrival of Gordon in the richly appointed room and Gordon listened. He was alone and like a wild beast in the lair waiting for the coming of his victim. Chester Blair had had with Clinch in the latter's office this afternoon, therefore he had known he might have abated a little of his confidence in his self-control, but he was sure that he assumed a victorious look and waited for the nabob to open the conversation.

"You have considered?" said Gordon, as the door closed behind him. "You have had this hour for my answer."

Holton Clinch looked a little uneasily in his chair and looked stealthily across the room. Was that a movement of a man in the man ready to spring a trap on him? Had Holton Clinch at the last moment turned traitor to himself?

"It is all right," said the millionaire, with an effort to appear at ease in the matter. "I don't know just what the world will think of this alliance—"

"It always thinks what it pleases, anyhow," broke in Gordon. "I will risk the opinion of the world and my will risk it."

Clinch started at the word wife. He saw the coming struggle. Lucille Holton! Was this human leech; he foresaw the unhappiness of the fair girl and her mother in thus consigning her to a life of bitterness and pain. But he must save himself. It would never do for him to be found suiciding; that he must still be one of the magnates of the city, that he must still be "in the swim." That was it. Better the wrecking of Lucille's life than the blasting of his own cowardice.

"Very well," he said, with a forced smile to Gordon, "if you will risk the whinnerings of society, I will look out for the rest."

"Then it is settled?"

"I have talked with Lucille and she consents."

Gordon could hardly keep back an ejaculation of triumph. The prize was his, the game had been played out, and he held the winning hand. Now, no one could rob him of the fruits of his victory. He had plotted every detail of the nefarious plot, and Chester Blair was dead to the world. He would appear as the scion of the house of Clinch.

"Did she raise much objection?" he ventured, after brief silence.

"She would have, but not expect her to acquiesce at once," was the rejoinder. "You know how women are, Gordon. It is not for us to do one thing for me."

Holton Clinch looked toward Gordon and for a moment seemed to hold his breath.

"I stand ready to return the favor," said Stanley Gordon, with a meaning smile.

"I want you to keep that infernal woman away," said the millionaire, with a sudden lost color. "She was here last night with another demand for money. This thing must stop from this moment—"

"I shall."

"That's good. Do you know what happened last night in this house?"

Gordon looked at the host, he knew what was coming.

"Lucille drove her from the mansion. She was angry enough to have killed her and I am not so sure that I did not hope she would do so. Stop her, Gordon, at any cost—"

At this moment footsteps sounded in the hall and the door opened to reveal Lucille in the threshold fairer than ever in a ball some gown.

Stanley Gordon took in the beautiful vision, but he saw that the girl was pale because and when she came forward he rose and bowed politely.

"My daughter, Mr. Gordon," said the banker; "but you have met before, she has told me you have met before."

"But once, father," said Lucille, as she halted in front of the man she had regained for her happiness. "We met in the park and—and it seems that you have carried out your threat."

She addressed the last words to Stanley and his face paled, for he noted the tone in which the words were spoken.

"I have played fairly," said he; "for months, Miss Lucille, I have been your secret admirer and with admiration came love—"

Lucille threw up her hand and abruptly broke the sentence.

"There is no love in this affair. It is simply business," she exclaimed. "There can be no love in an affair of this kind, and no person knows this better than yourself, Mr Gordon. I have given my promise to save him," and she threw a look at the prisoner. "I have consented to did man in the chair. "I have consented to become your wife on conditions that you are to spare him his honor while you sacrifice mine on the altar of greed and lust and consign me to a life of bitterness. Hold! Let me finish. Don't interrupt me, please."

Gordon bit his lip almost through. He knew that he would hear a terrible denunciation from the whitened lips of the beauty of Murray Hill, but, prepared as he was, he was not ready for the words that next rang from Lucille's throat.

"You are not worthy the love of the most abject woman in this city. You are but a blackmailer. In league with a woman who long ago lost every vestige of goodness, you conspire against my happiness, force my poor shivering mother into exile and would call to pieces if properly investigated. Wait! I am through in a moment. I have promised to become your wife; but that is all. The priest may unite us, but the moment after the ceremony we part forever. I will escape your villainy and disgrace and to save you old man; you to live hated, hunted, and at last to have all your plans dashed to earth. That is all. Good night!"

Lucille, with flashing eyes, turned from

"Kill him!—kill the spy!"

Gordon and in another moment had shut the door behind her.

The noise of her footsteps died away on the ears of the man left behind. They heard the last one on the marble stairs in the hall and at last Gordon turned to the millionaire.

"The girl—my future wife—showed her teeth, eh? But, wait. I'll tame her."

"Do you want her after all that?" asked Elton Climbs.

"Now more than ever!"

The millionaire shut his teeth hard, and sinking back in his chair let a groan slip from the depths of his soul.

CHAPTER XII.

GORDON AND THE TERROR.

The next day and the next Stanley Gordon did not enter the house in Black street.

Not that he wanted to avoid Hester, but he had certain matters of his own to look after. He wanted to discover what, if anything, Chester Blair was doing, for he knew that Lucille had given her heart to him and he doubted not that the girl had acquainted him with the deal he had made with the banker. It was more than likely that Chester would take up the gauntlet and make trouble for the schemers, therefore Gordon was anxious to meet the young man and find out what he might have formed in the bud.

If a vote be searched for the young man, Chester had not been at his place of business for nearly two days, and his clerks announced that he was out of the city. That might mean little or much and Stanley interpreted it to suit himself.

At the close of the second day after his exciting interview with Lucille on Murray Hill he entered a little dark street not far from one of the more pretentious thoroughfares. He almost ran against a man, who at sight of him nearly fell against a dark wall, which he hugged in abject terror. Gordon caught the movement and at once regarded it as suspicious.

At first he thought he had been followed, but the next moment, as he got a better look at the man, he turned pale and started back.

Seeing that he was wanted by Gordon, the man broke into a sudden skip and cry and in another minute had disappeared.

"Can it be possible?" cried Gordon, as he hastened on. He had lost the fellow. "Hesitated a moment and he would have had me by the throat. And if he is at large the devil may be to pay."

"What is that you're saying about the devil?"

At sound of the voice behind him Gordon turned and stood face to face with an old woman who leaned forward in her eagerness to look him fairly in the face. It was Hester's mother.

"Something you hither?" demanded Stanley. "Seems to me you should be in your seat at this hour."

"You've called it by the right name," chuckled the old woman. "It is a neat and cheerful room, is it not? Where's my girl?"

"Thunder take your girl! What have I to do with her?"

"You've bent her to your will," almost screamed the hag. "She has a temper, I know, but you have planned and she executes. You've made her blood rich people. You've made her stand with people where she ought to land if you don't turn her back into the paths of goodness."

Stanley broke into a laugh of derision. The thought of turning Hester back to the paths of sinlessness was too much for his risibles. His laugh irritated the old woman and she suddenly came forward with her hands unraised.

"I'm going to block your little game," she said. "I'm not going to let that wild bird of mine spoil the nest of another. I—"

Gordon and another moment had shut the door behind her.

The noise of her footsteps died away on the ears of the man left behind. They heard the last one on the marble stairs in the hall and at last Gordon turned to the millionaire.

"The girl—my future wife—showed her teeth, eh? But, wait. I'll tame her."

"Do you want her after all that?" asked Elton Climbs.

"Now more than ever!"

The millionaire shut his teeth hard, and sinking back in his chair let a groan slip from the depths of his soul.

CHAPTER XII.

GORDON AND THE TERROR.

The next day and the next Stanley Gordon did not enter the house in Black street.

Not that he wanted to avoid Hester, but he had certain matters of his own to look after. He wanted to discover what, if anything, Chester Blair was doing, for he knew that Lucille had given her heart to him and he doubted not that the girl had acquainted him with the deal he had made with the banker. It was more than likely that Chester would take up the gauntlet and make trouble for the schemers, therefore Gordon was anxious to meet the young man and find out what he might have formed in the bud.

If a vote be searched for the young man, Chester had not been at his place of business for nearly two days, and his clerks announced that he was out of the city. That might mean little or much and Stanley interpreted it to suit himself.

At the close of the second day after his exciting interview with Lucille on Murray Hill he entered a little dark street not far from one of the more pretentious thoroughfares. He almost ran against a man, who at sight of him nearly fell against a dark wall, which he hugged in abject terror. Gordon caught the movement and at once regarded it as suspicious.

At first he thought he had been followed, but the next moment, as he got a better look at the man, he turned pale and started back.

Seeing that he was wanted by Gordon, the man broke into a sudden skip and cry and in another minute had disappeared.

"Can it be possible?" cried Gordon, as he hastened on. He had lost the fellow. "Hesitated a moment and he would have had me by the throat. And if he is at large the devil may be to pay."

"What is that you're saying about the devil?"

At sound of the voice behind him Gordon turned and stood face to face with an old woman who leaned forward in her eagerness to look him fairly in the face. It was Hester's mother.

"Something you hither?" demanded Stanley. "Seems to me you should be in your seat at this hour."

"You've called it by the right name," chuckled the old woman. "It is a neat and cheerful room, is it not? Where's my girl?"

"Thunder take your girl! What have I to do with her?"

"You've bent her to your will," almost screamed the hag. "She has a temper, I know, but you have planned and she executes. You've made her blood rich people. You've made her stand with people where she ought to land if you don't turn her back into the paths of goodness."

Stanley broke into a laugh of derision. The thought of turning Hester back to the paths of sinlessness was too much for his risibles. His laugh irritated the old woman and she suddenly came forward with her hands unraised.

"I'm going to block your little game," she said. "I'm not going to let that wild bird of mine spoil the nest of another. I—"

"Kill him!—kill the spy!"

Gordon and in another moment had shut the door behind her.

The noise of her footsteps died away on the ears of the man left behind. They heard the last one on the marble stairs in the hall and at last Gordon turned to the millionaire.

"The girl—my future wife—showed her teeth, eh? But, wait. I'll tame her."

"Do you want her after all that?" asked Elton Climbs.

"Now more than ever!"

The millionaire shut his teeth hard, and sinking back in his chair let a groan slip from the depths of his soul.

CHAPTER XII.

GORDON AND THE TERROR.

The next day and the next Stanley Gordon did not enter the house in Black street.

Not that he wanted to avoid Hester, but he had certain matters of his own to look after. He wanted to discover what, if anything, Chester Blair was doing, for he knew that Lucille had given her heart to him and he doubted not that the girl had acquainted him with the deal he had made with the banker. It was more than likely that Chester would take up the gauntlet and make trouble for the schemers, therefore Gordon was anxious to meet the young man and find out what he might have formed in the bud.

If a vote be searched for the young man, Chester had not been at his place of business for nearly two days, and his clerks announced that he was out of the city. That might mean little or much and Stanley interpreted it to suit himself.

At the close of the second day after his exciting interview with Lucille on Murray Hill he entered a little dark street not far from one of the more pretentious thoroughfares. He almost ran against a man, who at sight of him nearly fell against a dark wall, which he hugged in abject terror. more than you think I do of your schemes. You shan't marry the rich girl on Murray Hill, for I'll turn the crazy man loose on you before you can get out of the house. Mind now and then, and when he has he can talk right. Say, do you remember the night which my girl found his pocket some nights ago when somebody left him for dead in the little room at Sidewell?"

"What about it?"

"Why, what about it? That's what you would like to know, I reckon. You have your secrets and I have mine. You'll be old Helen France have her little secrets, won't you? Now, that's good. But probably you don't remember whether you consented or not."

"How do you know about the paper you speak of?" demanded Stanley, and he threw a quick look up and down the street, as if in search of a friend. "I'll tell what I want to and what I don't want to tell I won't, that's all," he added, with a gesture. "You think you are playing a great game. Going to get a rich wife for it, I suppose? Well, I wish you joy, Stanley Gordon," and with this she laughed again and vanished.

Gordon heard her flying footsteps on the cobble stones and thought he caught a glimpse of her as she turned into the light of another street.

"What does she mean?" he asked himself. "Hester said she would take good care of that paper, and I bet her have charge of it. How in the world did her old mother come to get wind of it? And where is Hester?"

He did not attempt to follow the old woman, but turned back and soon showed up in Black street.

He was almost sure that he knew the man who had vanished but a short time before his very eyes. There was something about him even in the semi-darkness that looked familiar, and the moment he appeared Stanley had asked himself a startling question.

Hester could set all his doubts to rest and for this purpose he directed his steps toward the house in Black street and without knocking opened the lower door and bounded up the stairs.

In a few seconds he was at the door of Hester's chamber and then inside.

There was no light in the room. A strange silence pervaded the place as Gordon shut the door behind him and for a minute he stood in the darkness wondering if the room had another tenant.

"Something's wrong," he said, half aloud. "Something's happened to Hester France since I saw her last."

He heard footsteps outside the room in the hallway which he had lately traversed, and, drawing a pistol, he drew a revolver, and holding ready, turned his face toward the door. The shuffling noise went on and halted at the door.

Gordon held his breath. Never in his life had he been placed in just such a position. Surrounded by darkness in Hester's room at the same one outside—some one evidently determined to invade the place—he ventured to his very self to think of his tether especially if the unknown in the corridor was the girl's mother or Hester herself.

Seconds went by on leaden wings to Gordon. He could hear each of the pulsations of his heart as he waited with his hand on the trigger hoping that the unknown would strike a light before he entered the chamber.

At last the agony ended. The knob of the door turned. Gordon drew back so as to give full play to his arm and almost waited like a thug brought to bay.

"Why, it's all over!" a voice that sounded like a trumpet call in that tense silence. "This certainly is the right room. Wait, I've got a match."

Gordon faced in the direction of the voice and waited with his finger at tension. In another moment he would stand face to face with some one.

Suddenly he heard the scraping of a match on the wall. The first time was a failure, then the unseen one uttered an ejaculation of impatience and tried again. This time a little gas-jet leaped out to greet into a bluish flame which in turn got yellow and then red like a match in full fire.

"I can see now," laughed the person with the match. "I will find her if she's here."

Stanley Gordon waited for no more, but, one look being enough, he uttered a wild yell, dashed open the door, darted into the corridor, and finding the stairs in the gloom, bounded down them long, and, white-faced, landed in the street, out of breath and speechless.

The sight he had left behind he never forgot.

Further chapters of this extraordinary story will appear in the Ledger of next week. Try your skill at them, and still sending our free cameras and free patterns as stated on pages thirteen and fifteen.

Jenkins on Combinations.

BY JOEL SLOPER.

Jenkins contemplates writing an article on what he knows about combination safe locks. His extensive information and scientific researches on this subject are the result of the following humorous incident:

Bradley has charge of the subscription books of a society newspaper published near Bunker Hill square. These books have he places in a fine, large safe every night for safety and as well as there is no fear of burglars, he does not use the combination, merely shuts the door and locks it, the door would not fly open if the safe should fall through a burning building into the cellar.

Now, it was supposed in this newspaper office that no burglars were in the habit of usual piece would go floating around the combination; Jenkins, the magnificent Jenkins, of the beautiful long hair and splendid mustache—Jenkins, who writes nice things about the delicate perfumed editor who gets up the fragrant editorials and those exquisite little items about fashionable society—the Apollo of the sanctum, was never known to be guilty of himself in his inquisitive meddling. Curiously sauntering into the subscription department a few evenings past he became interested in Bradley's duty of putting away the subscription books for the night, and asked a number of questions—why he put the books in the safe, why he did not lock it. Would the books be saved if the building burned? Jenkins became so interested in the safety of the books, and evinced a strange, meddlesome impulse, he stepped up to the safe and examined the lock by which the combination was worked.

"Now, you understand, Bradley, "now you have played smash!"

"Why, what's the matter, Bradley? What have I done?" asked Jenkins, in an auxious tone.

"Nothing! Why, you have shut up shop and thrown the key away, that's what you have done. You have locked that safe and no one can open it."

"Why, you can open it, can't you, Bradley? Here, I'll turn it back again like it was. I only gave it a little turn; I did not think it would lock."

"The deuce you didn't think it would lock. An excellent excuse. In an angry tone "Are you an idiot, Jenkins? Why, blast it all, a ten-year-old boy would have had better sense! Don't you know that safe locks by a combination which you can turn a thousand ways? Now you have locked it on some unknown combination, and you might work for a month on the lock without opening it."

"Why, Bradley, my dear fellow, what is to be done about it?" exclaimed Jenkins, with a most lugubrious countenance.

"What's to be done about it? What can be done about it, Jenkins? Tomorrow morning a dozen clerks will be at their desks to write up the subscription books for this week's paper, and here you have shut up the publishing department by your foolish meddling, which will send the clerks off without work and delay the mailing of the paper, and now, with a vague idea that some fairy will spring up out of the floor and turn back the stubborn bolts, you ask, 'What's to be done about it?' I'll tell you what's to be done about it; tomorrow morning the safe company will send that splendid tandem team of theirs to the door and raise their derricks to take this large safe out through the window of the factory, travel down the hill through the door to throw the bolts, and, then, after the books are gotten out and business starts up again, the safe will be sent back with a new door, and you will pay two hundred dollars as the price of your instruction in safe combinations."

"Great Jupiter, Bradley! I've got no two hundred dollars to pay for opening that safe. Oh, how I wish I had not!" Dramatically exclaimed Jenkins, as he hopped around the room like Jack Sprat, and bowled like a man at his third wife's funeral. "Don't you think, Bradley, I might hang on to the combination if I should work on it here all night?"

"You can try it, perhaps you could," replied Bradley. And so Jenkins sat down by the safe, with his pocket full of dozen cigars on a small table by him, and began his scientific investigations for the night.

The next morning Bradley went down early; there was Jenkins, snoring in the easy chair, with his hand on the safe-knob, and the room filled with the smoke of cigars on the table. Poor, tired nature had succumbed to the exhaustive labors of the night, and the magnificent Jenkins, in a dilapidated condition, had hopelessly given up his self-imposed task at the end of the "wee small" hour of three a. m., and dropped into a sound sleep, in which he dreamed that the safe, in being lowered down the basement, had fallen on him and crushed him.

He opened his eyes and displayed a most ghastly countenance when Bradley entered, who said:

"Jenkins, you look sick!"

"Yes, Bradley, I feel miserable. I am going to have a lump off the Bunker Hill monument, and cap the climax of my folly with a splash."

"That's a capital idea, Jenkins, and I'll go down and see the water splash when you drop, and you will spell it with three s's."

"But you can't open it," replied Jenkins, opening his eyes in a wondering manner.

"Can't, though," said Bradley in a triumphing sort of way, as he sat down and threw back the bolt and opened the goodness knows how many times before he got on the combination.

"By the name of Heaven did you do it!" exclaimed the surprised and delighted Jenkins.

"Humph! just like I always open it," replied Bradley, in a careless tone. "The fact is, Jenkins, I could have opened it last night, but I wanted to teach you a lesson against meddling with business matters which you would never forget; and, now, Jenkins, if you happen to be short of money don't stave in the can of nitro-glycerin with a sledge-hammer, or stick your cigar in the keg of powder."

"I'm awful hungry, Bradley; let's go and have a good breakfast."

Not the Hose She Wanted.

"I wish to purchase some lawn hose," said the lady shopper.

"Yes'm," murmured the salesman, peering over the counter and gazing intently at her shoes.

"Rubber!" she exclaimed.

"Rubber!" echoed the clerk: "I was not rubbering. I merely wished to examine what else you wore."

"Sir!" I want rubber lawn hose."

Had it not been for the mercy-seat of the floor walker the salesman would have sent the lady to the department where they sold paper stockings for mutineers. You be he afterward explained, he was new to the business. He did not know but there was a new fad for rubber hose to protect the feet from the dews of evening.

PILES

"I have suffered with piles for thirty-six years. One year ago last April I began taking Cascarets for constipation. I have taken in all about twelve boxes and have not had a touch of it all. Cascarets has done more for me than anything else and I feel like a new man." George Kuyler, Napoleon, O.

Best For The Bowels

Cascarets

CANDY CATHARTIC

THEY WORK WHILE YOU SLEEP

Pleasant. Palatable. Potent. Taste Good. Do Good. Never Sicken, Weaken or Gripe. 10c. 25c. 50c. Sold in bulk. The genuine tablets stamped CCC. Guaranteed to cure or your money back.

Sterling Remedy Co., Chicago or New York

ANNUAL SALE, TEN MILLION BOXES

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

MENDING TISSUE

The WONDER of the Age. No sewing or darning. Repairs clothing, silk, satin, cotton goods, ribbons, fabrics of all kinds, kid gloves, oilcloth, carpets, rubber goods, tents, awnings, hammocks, umbrellas, parasols, fishing tackle, etc. Agents Wanted. Big Profits. Sample Package Free. Parsons Publishing Co., Parsonsen, Fla.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

THE CHICAGO LEDGER
30 YEARS OLD.
Published Every Saturday
—BY—
W. D. BOYCE CO.,
all communications should be addressed to
THE CHICAGO LEDGER,
112, 116 DEARBORN ST.,
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.
Single subscriptions to the Chicago Ledger by mail $1.00 a year, 50 cents for six months, 25 cents for 3 months. Remittances should be made by Post Office Money Order, Express Money Order, Bank Draft, Registered Letter, Post Office or Express Money Order, payable to the Chicago Ledger. Cost Dollar must be added to all foreign yearly subscriptions to pay postage.

Entered at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, as second-class matter.

THE CHICAGO LEDGER
AND SATURDAY BLADE.

ADVERTISING.
Advertising rate 10c per agate line, per insertion, for advertisements in the Chicago Ledger, Saturday Blade and Boyce's Weekly combined.

625,000
COPIES WEEKLY
PROVED CIRCULATION.

BACK NUMBERS.
Back numbers of the Ledger can be had by addressing this office. Always give the number desired. Handy with ten, accompanied by your full address, and your order will receive prompt attention. Price 5 cents per copy.

BEWARE OF STRANGERS.
The Ledger employs no traveling agents to solicit subscriptions. Any person claiming to be in that capacity is a fraud. No person is authorized to take subscriptions for the Ledger unless he or she be well known in the city or village where they have been employed, and unless he has a proper carry sack. A liberal reward will be paid for evidence that will enable us to arrest and convict each person so as we now traveling from town to town in different sections of the country, claiming to be agents of the Ledger and thereby defrauding the people. Beware of strangers.

UNION LABEL
ALLIED PRINTING TRADES UNION COUNCIL 326 CHICAGO, ILL.

Many a man's nose blushes for the acts of his elbow.

Rent pins and carpet tacks come under the head of felt goods.

The best possible throw of dice is to throw them into the sewer.

Of course Senator Quay is not dead and his enemies may as well act accordingly.

When some men get their freedom in this glorious land of the free they are in the ex-convict class.

Perhaps we may have to dig the canal first and ask permission of Colombia afterward.

We don't need an elastic currency as much as one with a little glue on each side of every dollar.

How would you like to own a few inches of that State street property which rents for $1,600 a foot?

At the exact moment the proposal is made a young man actually believes that he isn't worthy of the girl.

All the joys of Heaven and all the torments of the other place lie within the small circumference of a wedding ring.

Macedonia has discovered, after appealing pretty generally all around, that it can get freedom only by fighting for it.

King Edward's speech at the close of the British Parliament was one of the best ever written by his private secretary.

A company of Chicagoans is going to work the Brazilian diamond fields if the Glass Trust does not get out an injunction.

Live shells were fired at a French warship without any apparent effect upon it. However, Dewey's men were not behind the guns.

When Charlie Schwab gets his tailoring trust in operation he should make a specialty of bullet-plate vests for kings and emperors.

As society has demonstrated that it is not strong enough to suppress the toy pistol the only thing left to do was to discover a cure for lockjaw.

Some of Chicago's smoky atmosphere should be preserved in a glass case, for let us hope that it will be a great curiosity a hundred years from now.

LINKS OF LOVE AND GOLD;

Or, The Grey-Osmond Duel.

By Colonel Prentiss Ingraham.

(Copyright by W. D. Boyce Co.)

Begun in No. 35, Aug. 29. Subscriptions can be begin with that issue, or back copies can be procured from new agents, or our agents, or by mail from office of publication.

CHAPTER XIII.

From the day of his discovery that his confidential clerk was the husband of Maud Melville, Gerald Grey's nature seemed to change. He became more stern, more silent, and was wont to spend much time in meditation.

Towards Calvert Forrester and his beautiful bride he was never more kind; dined with them every Sunday, and in many ways proved his regard for them.

Though often alone with Maud, he never referred to the confession of his love for her; and from the way in his eyes, in his almost brotherly affection, while she became each succeeding day more fair.

There was one secret she had never told her husband—that Gerald Grey once ever confessed his love for her.

Not that she wished to hide it from any secret motive, only she thought it might cause a restraint between the two, and as it was a thing of the past, why mention it.

That Gerald Grey still loved her, she felt assured; she saw it in his eyes, in his every act; yet she was too wise to show that she knew it, but she pitied him from her inmost heart, and admired him the more for his brave manner of bearing his grief. If she was unlucky he was, she felt, else he would wish to die, and she knew the strong nature of Gerald Grey was capable of such as deep a love as her own.

Thus matters went on for several months and then Calvert Forrester was appointed the manager of the firm, and his salary largely increased, and had rendered himself invaluable to his employers, and Langley & Co. blessed the day that he came to their establishment.

A few months after the marriage of Calvert Forrester and Maud, Gerald Grey sat alone in his business quarters, a cigar between his lips, and his brow clouded in painful thought.

"There's a man to see you, sir," said his valet.

"Who is it, Payson?"

"Can't tell, sir. He says he's an old acquaintance, and wishes to see you on particular business."

"Show him up, Payson."

A moment after a stalwart form entered the room, and as the door closed behind him he bowed low to Gerald Grey.

At a glance he was recognized.

It was the man who had made the assault upon Gerald Grey, and who was sent to prison for one year.

"Well, sir, what do you want?" and perhaps it was caution, perhaps it was habit, but Gerald Grey put the hand by his vest.

"I'm to see you, sir, to bring you some news."

"I thought you were in jail."

"No, sir," I served out the time a man, and now I'm an honest citizen again."

"Yes, you and honesty are likely to go hand in hand for long as you can get no chance to steal. I wish the judge had incarcerated you for life."

"Now, that's hard, for I didn't hurt you, an' I've been punished for what I did do; but I holds no grudge ag'in' you, no, sir, it ain't in me, and I'll prove it.- I've come to do you a service."

"You can do me no favor other than to get out," said Gerald Grey, coldly.

"I'd not be so sure of that, Mr. Grey, for I can place your hands on the man who attempted your life; and it was not for gold he wanted to kill you."

"Ha! you say so? Put that man in my power and I will pay you liberally."

"I'll do it, sir, and I'll expect liberal pay, for I'm going to play traitor."

"You have become the one on that point; at the trial you refused to tell what you knew of your comrade. Why do you wish to do so now?"

"Because he left me in jail one year and made no effort to get me out, and when I did get out, he would not lend me a helping hand. Revenge is sweet to a poor man, as well as to a gentleman like you, Mr. Grey."

"You speak the truth there, my man, as I have had cause to know. But now to the work before you. When will you place the rascally assassin in my hands?"

"Have you got pluck, Mr. Grey?"

"Try me," drily said Gerald Grey.

"It will try you, sir, for you've got to go alone—leastways, with me—into a place where there is danger."

"Why all this mystery?" asked Gerald, with some impatience.

"It can't be worked without mystery. Men as has their necks in the halter and is known to the perlice, must live in out-of-the-way places, and your man is keeping dark, owing to some little irregularities in his behavior of late."

"Where is he?"

"Say what night you will go, and I'll be ready to lead you to him."

"Tomorrow night—and I'll go well-armed against treachery."

"I advise you to. Pistols often save men's lives."

"Yes: and take life, too. Take a drink of brandy there on the sideboard, and come for me at eight tomorrow night."

The ex-prisoner poured out a liberal glass and then took his departure, leaving Gerald Grey in a more painful frame of mind than that in which he had found him, but with a nervous anxiety to face the man who had attempted to take his life from revenge. Who can he be, he wondered?

At the appointed hour, Big Angel, the ex-prisoner put in an appearance at the rooms of Gerald Grey, and found that gentleman in a fresh suit of clothes and easy suit, and with slouch hat and top boots, awaiting him.

"Well, my friend of the angelic name, I hope after tonight you will prove the old adage true, 'Angel's visits few and far between,' for I don't like such cattle as you. But I am ready; take a drink and we'll start."

"I hope you has the amount to pay me, sir, when I've taken you to your man."

"Yes, I have that, but you seem very nervous about your money."

"You see, sir, I'll have to skip, after I've shown you your man, and I'll need more cash to get away with, for I'd be put out of the country if I was caught in this country doing a pard. You see, sir, there's honor among thieves, you know."

"So I've heard, but always doubted the truth of the assertion. Come, I am ready."

Seizing the cane and carefully pulling the brim of his hat well over his eyes, Gerald Grey left the room, went down the stairs, and stood awaiting his coming.

In a few minutes he rolled away.

A half hour's ride brought them to a few deserted-looking old houses, standing isolated near the bank of the Hudson River.

Here then left hack and Gerald and his guide dismounted.

Arrived, they paused in the shadow of yonder trees. If I do not return in two hours, go to the nearest police station, tell them where I am, and say that I went on the track of a foe who attempted my life, I have reason to believe, on more than one occasion."

This was said in a low tone, but reached the ear of Big Angel, who was calmly surveying the horses.

"Now, then, and if you play me false, you will be the first to go. I'll send the devil a thief before you, Gerald, sternly.

"Mr. Grey, it ain't right to doubt a man who is honestly trying to serve you," reproachfully said the man.

"You serve for gold and revenge, not for friendship, and I am ready, so lead on, I am impatient."

The man approached a low doorway and fitting a key into the lock, opened the door and stepped within the darkness.

But Gerald Grey fearlessly followed him, and his guide said:

"Keep your hand on my shoulder, keep step with me and come on."

"Will the floor bear us?"

"Yes: we will catch him asleep in his den. If we don't, the middle floor above might be a score of wicked fellows in this house, just ready for a night's crime."

"You have brought me, then, into a den of thieves and cutthroats?"

"Yes: and some pretty wicked fellows, Mr. Grey, I admit; but hold tight to my shoulder, for I've done a thing or two myself done lately, and the floors and stairs are rickety."

"Yes: their creaking sounds like death-walks," answered Gerald Grey, as the two ascended the stairs to the middle floor, a total darkness, leading the way without faltering.

With one hand upon his guide's shoulder, the other on a revolver, Gerald Grey followed up and down several stairs, through several hallways, until he was so confused he did not know whether he was above the ground or below.

"You are not taking me to the devil's dominions, fellow," he said, at last.

"No, sir, I'm taking you to the home of angels, that's a fact; but I'll soon have you there all right," and as he spoke he threw open the door of a dimly-lighted room.

By the oil lamp on the pine table, Gerald Grey took in the situation at a glance. A large room, with several doors and windows, a table, a chair, and a cot upon which lay a man, apparently sleeping.

A quick glance behind him showed several passageways running in as many different directions from the spot where he stood.

"There he is asleep, creep to him, and you've got him," said the guide, in a loud whisper.

Gerald Grey started lightly across the floor, but as he did so he cast a sweeping glance around him.

What he there saw proved to him that he had been led into a trap.

Suddenly in each doorway and window stood a man—a pistol in hand, and eyes turned on him, while the one who was on the cot half arose and cried:

"Gerald Grey, you are my prisoner."

Gerald Grey was a man of indomitable courage and possessed extraordinary coolness and nerve, and did not lose his presence of mind, although he knew he had been brought there to be put to death.

On the contrary, he acted with lightning rapidity, and a shot from his pistol shivered the glass lamp into fragments, and left the room in total darkness.

Then, ere the jingle of falling glass had ceased, another shot was heard, followed by the hoarse tones of the treacherous guide, crying:

"Curse him! Kill him, boys! he's done for me!"

There was a heavy fall, a groan of agony, a rush of feet, and Gerald Grey was out of the room once more in the passageway.

He could not see, but he remembered one leading to the right, and with a noiseless step he fled along, leaving wild yells and curses behind him.

After running a dozen paces, he went cautiously along, his hands stretched out before him until he came to a door, for he felt the knob.

As his hand touched it, the door was thrown open and a dimly-lighted room was before him.

Stepping across the threshold he confronted a slender form—a young girl who seemed startled by his appearance.

"Fair girl, I was decoyed into a den of cutthroats. I have just escaped and thrown myself on your mercy to escape," he said, earnestly.

"Quick! Your pursuers are coming. I'll save you. Seek shelter in yonder closet!"

The girl spoke with energy, and at the same time pointed to a door in the wall at the other side of the room.

In this Gerald Grey sought refuge, while the young girl turned to meet those who were coming in force with the pursuit.

"What is it? Is any one killed?" he heard her shout in a shrieked voice.

"Yes: the wrong man got his light put out—poor Big Angel—and the fellow as did it is escaping from us, Bonny Bess!" cried a gruff voice.

"Don't dare to see what the noise was. How did he get away, Uncle?"

"Ask as a whistle. He put out the light with one shot, killed Angel with another, and then skipped. Boys, we'll go back and search for the other—because I'll be he's certainly not come this way, or my niece would have seen him."

"I'll lock the door, Uncle, and if he comes this way I'll shoot him dead, so be frightened," said the maiden, and, handing one of the men a lamp which he had asked for, the girl locked the door behind him.

Then she found and lighted a candle and turned to Gerald.

"They have gone; now you can come out."

Gerald Grey stepped from the closet and stood before her, his face fearless, his lips determined—a splendid specimen of manhood.

The young girl gazed upon him with unconcealed admiration, and said, in a low tone:

"You do not look wicked, like the rest of the men I have known."

"Because I am a fair girl," said Gerald Grey, and he gazed in unfeigned admiration on the maiden who stood before him—a well-dressed, beautiful creature of scarcely more than seventeen, and upon whose face evil association had left no guilty trace.

CHAPTER XV.

"Why did you come here if you are not wicked?" asked Bonnie Bess, looking straight into the man's eyes.

"I will tell you in a word. A year or more ago, I was attacked in the street by two men, one of whom attempted to kill me. One of them escaped; the other—the gang called him Big Angel—was captured by the aid of a gentleman who came to my aid. He was sent to prison for one year. Serving his time out, by wrongly recommended to betray the man who more than once had attempted my life, and led me into a trap here, from which I can only escape by your kindness, fair girl."

"Who was this man who wished to kill you?"

"That I do not know."

"Can you think of any one who has a life grudge against you?"

"Yes; of several."

"Who are they? You do not look like a man who would wrong another intentionally."

Gerald Grey's face flushed, and he seemed for an instant nonplussed by the innocent compliment. Then he answered:

"I told you before that I was not wicked, but I have been a gambler, a man of travel-ler, and, of course, have hurt some men in my time."

"And women, too?"

Again the rich blood filled the man's face, to recede in an instant, and to leave it deadly pale—a paleness that his imminent danger for a few minutes only had called there.

To turn the tide of conversation, he said, quickly:

"I love them too dearly, respect them too highly, to injure them; but allow me to become a questioner in my turn. Why do I find you here, in a house of thieves, fair girl?"

"That is a long story," said the maiden, sadly.

"Yet, one to which I will gladly listen. You look like a lady, are refined in manner, educated, and——"

"And what?" she said, as Gerald Grey paused.

"And beautiful—far more beautiful than many New York belles of rouge."

"I know it, but"—and the young girl hesitated—"I am the daughter of one who died on the gallows for murder; I am the niece of the leader of a band of robbers; the abode of thieves. Now you know the history of Bessie Bernard, familiarly called Bonnie Bess."

The maiden ceased speaking, and her red lips wore a sneer, her large, dark, passionate eyes flashed with a fire that threatened to burst out in fury.

"Have you any faith in man's promises?" asked Gerald, quietly.

"I have never had cause to know whether men were true or not," innocently replied Bonnie Bess.

"Then, let me prove to you that some men are true in this world. Leave this house, these evil associations, and come with me; you shall have a home where your uncle cannot find you, and you shall have all that will make you happy. Bonnie Bess, it is no idle offer I make you; nor is it a fancy on my part for your beautiful face. I am deeply interested in you, and you have saved my life, and I die dead to me, for there is much I wish to carry out ere death puts his icy touch upon me. Besides, I believe you wholly innocent of wrong-doing, notwithstanding your evil associations."

"God bless you. I am true to myself and I will leave this devil's den——"

"Though also the abode of an angel."

"Do not compliment me; I do not like it."

"I will not offend again. Will you come now?"

"Yes; I will accompany you; I will make a home for myself and will ask you only to trust you to aid me. If you fail me, I will wish to die."

"Come, I will not deceive you."

The maiden moved quickly about the room, made a few hasty preparations, and then throwing open a door, concealed by a curtain, stepped out into a dark passage.

Without a word Gerald Grey followed her.

"Give me your hand; it is dark as night, but I know the way well," said Bonnie Bess, and the man clasped her soft hand within his own.

A walk of a few steps brought them to a staircase which descended into the same darkness, and at the foot they found a door heavily bolted.

The bars were readily removed by Gerald Grey, and the two stood on the outer air, where the storm shone quietly down upon them.

Before them lay a small garden plot of flowers, which seemed to have been well cared for, and which covered the mass of old houses. Here the maiden paused and said, firmly:

"You must make me a promise before I leave this spot."

"I will do so; name your wish."

"That you will not bring the police upon this spot in any way, and that I be known that a band of ruffians have their den here."

"That is a hard request to make, I think."

"Perhaps, for the good of the community, it is; but I love my uncle, and as he is he has been ever good to me——"

"Good to us helpless ones to a den of infamy."

"He knew not where else to have me go; you are free; you can go; but I will not leave with you, as you desire to bring the only one that I love to the gallows. Did I not tell you that my father was hung like a dog, strangled to death by the law?"

"I fear you wrong me; I will make the promise."

"Thank you! ha! who are those? Come, we must reenter the house."

As the maiden spoke, several men came suddenly into the garden from an adjoining garden, divided by a large hedge.

As the young girl turned to retrace her way to the open doorway, followed by Gerald Grey, they were discovered, and the strangers rushed forward, one of them crying:

"There is the fellow now! Shoot him down if he resists!"

Instantly several pistol shots were fired, and with a cry of pain, Bonnie Bessie staggered and would have fallen had not Gerald Grey caught her on his left arm, while his right hand quickly drew a revolver.

One tall fellow was in front—the same who had been to the gambling room and asked her about the fugitive.

Instantly Gerald Grey fired and without a moan the man fell dead.

"Great heavens! you have killed my uncle!" cried Bonnie Bessie, and she tried to release herself from Gerald Grey's arm.

But the effort was too much for her; she was already suffering from a bullet wound in the shoulder, and she fainted away.

Grasping her more firmly, Gerald Grey fired right upon the others of the party, and dashed away at full speed.

Leaping an old fence, he found himself in an old field. One glance about him, and he recognized the clump of trees where he had left his carriage.

It was only a hundred yards away, and he started at full speed, clinging closely to his unconscious burden.

As he neared the trees the sound of alarm behind him, and he felt that a close pursuit would follow.

But strong of limb and swift of foot, he knew that he could reach the timber before his pursuers, and if the carriage was still there, easily get away. If the vehicle was gone, why, then, he must stand at bay and depend on his own courage, cool nerve, and deadly aim to keep back the enemies.

At last he reached the woods, and just in time, as quite a number of men were coming from the garden in full chase. The carriage was there; the coachman asleep on the box, but it did not take an instant to rouse him, place Bonnie Bessie inside, and spring to himself.

"Drive for your life, coachman; yonder hellhounds will make short work of us if they catch us," cried Gerald Grey, and the whip descended heavily upon the horses, who bounded away at a full run from the scene of danger.

* * * * * * *

For reasons best known to himself, Gerald Grey did not tell his confidential clerk and manager of his adventure in the old house! den, nor of the visitor who had betrayed him into the trap.

And what seemed very strange to Calvert, who knew his employer's love of city life, Gerald Grey suddenly moved from town to the country, renting, he said, a little box of a cottage out in Jersey somewhere, so that he could get a chance to have some shooting.

As it was not the game season, it seemed strange for him to become a hunter; but Calvert Forrester did not question him; he knew that his employer took many strange notions, and believed a week would tire him of country life.

Yet a week, a month, and longer passed away, and not only did Gerald Grey seem not to tire of his country home, but he only came to town once in several days, so much did he seem to like his cottage in Jersey.

When leaving Hoboken Bay in the city, Gerald Grey was wont to continually invite Calvert Forrester to his retreat, and scarcely a day passed that the manager did not drop in, and over a friendly glass of wine and fragrant cigar, enjoy a chat with his employer.

But to the "Rancne," as Gerald Grey called his fancy cottage, Calvert Forrester, strange to relate, was never invited.

"It would be so pleasant to run out and spend Sunday with Mr. Grey," said Maud, who felt a certain natural in a woman to see the spot in which this proud, stern, mysterious man had hidden himself.

To gratify his wife, Calvert several times hinted that Mrs. Forrester would like a day in the country; but Gerald Grey did not respond with a prompt invitation to the cottage, and the subject was dropped, while the merchant cared not to be intruded upon the privacy of his employer, evidenced in his opinion, when Gerald, when dining with him and his wife, which he did once a week, would seem to avoid speaking of himself and his modus operandi of whiling away the time when in the country.

About the time that Maud's curiosity had risen in fever heat, a circumstance occurred that at once turned the thoughts of all in another direction.

That circumstance was the sudden death of the senior member of the firm of Langley & Co.

He had been a good liver, a fair drinker, and had died from an apoplectic stroke, seating an epicurean dinner—died with a glass of rare old wine in his hand, and while his lips were praising its delicious-ness.

He was a bachelor, with a wild nephew as his only heir, and as he fell from his chair, a smile of triumph, not of sudden wealth, and regret at the death of a generous friend, was on the nephew's face.

The boon companions of the dead merchant, and like fellow-livers, turned pale—they stood at the threshold of death, across which they might step at any moment, and they at once began making their wills to cut down their supply of liquor, eat less rich food, and go to church on Sunday, pay up their pew rent, and live virtuous lives—at least, until the funeral was over.

The heir and nephew did his duty nobly in his uncle's wake, closed business quietly, paid extra for heavy black plumes for the horses, and when the will was read, was enough to carry a brigade of mourners, and ordered a fine tombstone.

Then, when all was over, and when he was alone in his mansion, he went down to the office, and with a sneer of contempt for his sire to withdraw from the firm; he desired a settlement of accounts, for he meant to invest his money in Europe, where he expected to live in the seamiest of high life, for though he never expected to have a wife, he intended to have a mistress, and Paris was the city where he knew he could allow himself that feminine luxury and not create a scandal thereby.

"It will necessitate our sending a competent man to Europe," followed up Augustus, but it shall be done, and the settlement made with you within six months," said Gerald Grey, quietly, and with inward exultation, for he was not sorry at losing the whole firm, for it was a losing game at large, and the income would divide more gentlemanly than profitably.

Having settled this with the idle and dissolute heir, Gerald Grey sought the home of Calvert Forrester, and found the family in an early hour that day.

When the dessert was removed, and cigars lighted, Gerald Grey said, with some degree of annoyance:

"Forrester, I am going to make a proposal to you, that I fear neither yourself nor your wife will like; but I wish you to accept it as firm that I do so."

"In any way that I can serve you, Mr. Grey, do not hesitate to command me," said Calvert, earnestly.

"Thank you; well, to dive at once into the matter, that scapegrace nephew of my late partner wishes to dispose of his share in the firm. He will necessitate some one going to California, China and Australia, to square up accounts with the different houses where we have agents."

"I will be ready, sir, just as soon as I can take my wife to her parents and return," promptly answered Calvert Forrester.

But Maud turned pale. Australia! China! California! why, they were thousands of miles of sea and land divide her from her husband!

And for six months, too! Oh! what an age of time for one to be separated from one near and dear!

It was no wonder the tears came into the beautiful eyes of Maud Forrester and that she fluttered out the words:

"Oh, Calvert, must you really go?"

Gerald Grey looked at her coldly, said Gerald Grey, pleasantly; but again that strange light came into his eyes.

"Mrs. Forrester, you must not be unreasonable. Mr. Grey has honored me with his confidence, and has certainly done much for me, for us, as a father or brother could have done; nay, more, those of one's kin, many of them, have been willing to stretch forth a helping hand. No; I must go and you shall have a home here in Riverside Cottage, and when I come back it will seem like one of the fairy tales we love so well."

The kind, quiet tones of her husband reconciled the loving wife, and she at once threw aside her objections, and entered with spirit into the plan.

Two days after, Calvert Forrester and his lovely wife left for Riverside Cottage, and ten days later the confidential clerk of Langley & Co. sailed for San Francisco.

Gerald Grey bade him farewell at the steamer, and watched the vessel far down the harbor.

Then he turned away with a strange look upon his face, his eyes brightly gleaming, his lips firm and cold.

CHAPTER XVI.

In a pleasant valley of New Jersey, an hour's ride by sail, and a half hour's drive by vehicle, was a lovely little country home.

A few acres of woodland, field and pasture, a productive little garden and an equally generous flower plot, filled with choice exotics, surrounded the house—a gothic building, neat, pretty, cosy, the very dove-cote for young lovers.

A substantial barn, cows, sheep, and fowls in abundance, with a stream wandering near by, the Hawk-wood Mountains in the distance, and a fine view up and down the valley, with here and there dotted with other homes, made up the pretty picture.

No; not quite, for in the front room in an easy rocker, sat a man in deep study.

The eyes were downcast, for the hands were busy upon a zigzag pattern; but erect were they raised to glance up the road, which was within a few rods of the door, and then the beauty of those eyes was visible, and ah! how beautiful they were—deep wells of passion that seemed to burn those upon whom they turned.

The face was that of a brunette of the Spanish type, and the features mobile, faultless and full of expression.

On the balcony ran a parrot, a knowing bird, that chattered incessantly, and in its cage near by were canaries and a mocking bird, while a huge French cat and three blooded setter dogs was asleep on the grass.

Presently the parrot called out:

"Man coming!"

The lady understood the bird—the two were good friends—and sprang up with a vicious bark, while the eyes of his mistress were bent upon the man in the gate.

The parrot was right, a man was entering the yard, but not a stranger, evidently.

He was a thick-set man, heavily bearded, and while dressed in the best of clothes well, but not after a fashionable style.

"This is Mrs. Grey, I believe?" he said, politely removing his hat.

"Yes; what do you wish?" quietly replied the one addressed.

"Is Mr. Grey at home?"

"He is in the city, and will not return until evening."

"I am glad to hear it; I came to see you," and the man gave a savage kick at the terrier, who was growling about his heels.

"Sir, state what you would you see me, sir? If you have business, explain, please, for I never receive in the absence of my husband," and the tones and manner were haughty in the extreme.

"Your pardon me, but isn't that a good joke?" and the man laughed a deep, hollow laugh, that grated rudely upon the ears of the woman.

"Sir, you are insulting me, sir!" she said, with firmness, her face very pale, her lips white.

"Now, look here, my fair lady, you must not answer in such a haughty tone. I come to talk with you on a subject that deeply interests me and you."

"I will not listen to you, sir."

"I will talk quick, but as I've had no liquor for several hours, my tongue must necessarily lag. You don't know me, madame, but yet I lived in the same house with you for several years, and have seen you often; besides, it was me that closed the eyes of your father, and I've been told that since he'd have told me to look after Bonnie Bess; but you seem to have looked after yourself pretty well."

"Who are you?" asked Bessie, looking straight in the man's face and holding on to the back of her chair by which she stood, for she trembled.

"I'm the innocent cause of the row at the den that night, Bessie, you see, I'm the man whom your so-called husband wished to kill; it was me who has made three attempts to get him his life, and will yet, every time."

"Why do you wish to kill Gerald Grey?" asked Bessie, with a look which told that for your ears; but it is revenge that drives me on."

"And you have come here to meet him?" faltered Bonnie Bessie.

"I'm not sure that Gerald Grey is not a man to meet in an open fight. If I shoot him down, I want to be sure he will be from behind a fence, or a thicket; he's too nearly dead to fight, and I'm fairly dumbuck."

"Grand rascal! grand rascal!" shrieked the parrot.

"That bird's got sense, he has," said the man, admiringly; "he knows his master well. Now, I've got to business: you married to Gerald Grey?"

"You are impertinent, sir; but what matters it to you?"

"Will tell you, if you are married, then you don't need aid; if not, there may come a day when you need money, and your uncle left a few thousands paid that I found in his rooms, and I concluded to come and tell you that Walt Williams' for you was there's honor among we class, hard as it is, and though I confess to having taken a fee for my services, you would not take as aid and hence I looked you up, and will put the money right into your paw."

"You are very kind; but I do not care for the money. It is blood money, and if not taken at the point of the knife was stolen in the night from those who earned it honestly. You are the heiress to the vile horde, I give it to you," and Bonnie Bessie threw back her head disdain.

"Thank you, Miss; it is very kind of you to make me your heir; it will aid me in running your husband to the grave."

"What! Are you so vile as that?"

"Compare me, fallen though I be to the wife of one who killed your own kin—the only one that you ever had, I guess."

Bonnie Bessie flinched, the shot went home; but she spoke quickly and earnestly:

"Accident made me what I was—the daughter of a man who died on the gallows, the niece of a murderer and thief. Yet, my uncle was kind to me; that is, he gave me all I wanted, and treated me well; but, alas! he reared me to know how vile my life was under his care. He let me see an honest world and then took me back to live amid scenes of infamy. Was that kind?"

"And for it you kill him."

"I did not kill him——"

"Yet you married the man who did."

"I met that man in deadly danger, and I saved him. In escaping, we were discovered

(Continued on page ten.)

Dyspepsia

Don't think you can cure your dyspepsia in 'any other way than by strengthening and toning your stomach.

That is weak and incapable of performing its functions, probably because you have imposed upon it in one way or another over and over again.

You should take

Hood's Sarsaparilla

It strengthens and tones the stomach, and permanently cures dyspepsia and all stomach troubles. Accept no substitute.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

MORPHINE--OPIUM

and LAUDANUM HABITS cured in a few days by local treatment. Painless. Harmless. Not a form of nerve tonic, but a positive remedy. A local treatment sufficient to convince you, sent free with book of testimonials. Correspondence confidential. Opa Specialty Co., Dept. 1, CHICAGO, ILL.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

WETO GRAPH

The Great Secret Writing System.

FOR LOVERS AND OTHERS

Your friends and every one else writes letters should have a Weto Graph. It is the system of secret sign writing for correspondence, and it gives the parties the privilege of writing secret messages to each other in the presence of others, and they can write to the point, for no one can write to or read what you have written. Use of fan to have a Weto Graph. Don't miss it. Send 25 cents and we will send the Weto Graph by mail, with full instructions. Address PENN PUBLISHING CO., PARKADA, PA.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

$5.50

DUST PROOF

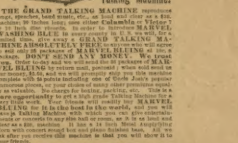
STEM SET

ACCURATE AND DURABLE.

Genuine American movement, plainly marked with Maker's name, "Ingersoll-Trenton," and fully guaranteed. Each one tested and setting adjusted at movement required by Engineers and Railway employes. This watch is made of the best grade rolled gold plate, DUST AND DAMP PROOF case, which is the equal of many cases sold for $10.00 and $15.00. Specially made for Railway Engineers, Firemen, Conductors, Brakemen, and those requiring a strong and durable watch. SENT C. O. D. with privilege of examination before paying. Write for free booklet. Agents wanted. Big profits. Catalogue of Watches, Clocks and Jewelry. All are reliable—big 3. Address, ALLEN & CO., Wholesale Jewelers, 1180 Broadway, New York.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

FREE



HIGH GRADE Talking Machine.

THE GRAND TALKING MACHINE reproduces songs, speeches, band music, etc., as loud and natural as the original. It is a genuine Talking Machine, and is not to be confused with the toy machines sold at 10c. In order to introduce our WASHING BLUE in every country in U. S. we will, for a limited time only, give away FREE with every 10c. package of WASHING BLUE a GRAND TALKING MACHINE as described above. Remember you get the Machine and Record complete for the trifling sum of 10c. Send 10c. for a package of WASHING BLUE and you will send the 25 packages of MARVEL BLUE and the Machine will be sent you FREE.

Our object in giving away the Machine is to introduce our MARVEL BLUE, and we will promptly refund you the 10c. you send us for the WASHING BLUE if you are not entirely satisfied after using one package of MARVEL BLUE. Don't confuse our offer with any other offer you may have received. No charge for boxing, packing, etc. This is a rare opportunity to get a good, reliable Talking Machine absolutely free. Your friends will surely buy MARVEL BLUE after they hear the Machine. Remember, the Talking Machine will reach you in perfect order, and if a mechanical defect or concerts or songs are not as loud or clear, as it is at least equal to a $5.00 machine, we will refund you the full purchase price. Act at once. Don't delay. Send to-day. Remember, we will not accept less than 25 packages. Address, MARVEL BLUE MFG. CO., Dept. U 178 Greenwich St., New York.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

EPILEPSY OR FITS

Dr. F. E. Grant, the eminent Specialist of Kansas City, Mo., who has made a life study of all diseases arising from the perception of Neurosis, such as Epilepsy or Fits, has at last proven that this terrible disease

CAN BE CURED

so matter how many have pronounced it incurable. If you suffer from Fits or convulsions send him their name and address and he will send them one of his large bottles of medicine free of charge. Those who accept this offer will find that the impossibilities of yesterday are the realities of today. To receive the boon, it is only necessary to address

FREE

DR. F. E. GRANT,
917 New Ridge Bldg., KANSAS CITY, MO.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

ART OF REST.

May Be Acquired and Used With Great Benefit.

Complete and restful poise of the body and mind is an art not easily gained.

Perhaps nothing brings one as much content, comfort, happiness and pleasure as those conditions of easy, restful, resourceful and well-balanced mind and body, that make of work a pleasure and the daily life happy and peaceful.

The nervous housewife busy with a hundred duties and harassed by children; the business man, worried with the press of daily affairs, debts, etc., cannot enjoy the peace and restful repose and healthful nervous balance unless they know how.

There is a way. First and foremost the stomach must be consulted. That means leaving off coffee absolutely, for the temporary stimulant and the resulting depression is a sure ruin to the nervous system, and the whole condition of health and happiness rests upon stomach, nerves and mind.

Start with the stomach, that is the keystone to the whole arch. Stop using things that break down its power, upset its nervous energy and prevent the proper digestion of the food and the consequent manufacture of healthful blood and nerves, brain and tissues.

When you quit coffee take on Postum Food Coffee. That is like stopping the payment of interest and starting on a career where you are loaning money and receiving interest. You stop poisoning the system with coffee and start building up the broken down nerve cells by powerful elements contained in Postum. These are pure food elements ably selected by experts for the purpose of supplying just the thing required by Nature to perform this rebuilding.

These are solid substantial facts and can be proven clearly to the satisfaction of any one, by personal experience. Try the change yourself and note how the old condition of shattered nerves and worried mind changes to that feeling of restful poise of a well balanced nervous system.

The managing physician of a hygienic sanitarium in Indiana says that for five years in his practice he has always insisted upon the patients leaving off coffee and taking Postum Food Coffee with the most positive, well defined results and with satisfaction to the most confirmed coffee toper.

The Doctor's name will be furnished by the Postum Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

Look in each package for a copy of the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville"

An Up-to-Date Fable.

Once upon a Time an Old Gentleman observed a small Boy hacking one of his beloved Fruit Trees with a Hatchet. Now the Old Chap was under the Impression that he was carrying Weight for his Age, which put him Wise to the Folly of chasing the Youngster, so he thought it was Him to work a Moral-Jerky-Catching Trick. "Come here, my good Boy," he called in a tone of Voice that was Smeared all over with Friendliness. "O'wan, what's Unawin' you?" asked the Urchin, as he began to Side-Step. "I have something Important to tell you," answered the Foxy Old Hypocrite. "Well, go put it on Ice," rejoined the wily Hatchet Manipulator as he started in the opposite Direction. "Little Boys like Me don't need to Know Everything."

Moral—Where Ignorance is Bliss it is Folly to acquire Blistering Wisdom.

Radisson on the Chippewa.

A new town in Sawyer County, Wis., on the Omaha Road. Located on both the Chippewa and Couderay Rivers in center of a most fertile and promising hardwood district. Good mascalonge, bass and pike fishing in both rivers. Exceptional opportunities for landseekers. If looking for a new location don't fail to see this new country. For map and full particulars write to Postmaster, Radisson, Sawyer Co., Wis., or to T. W. Teasdale, General Passenger Agent, C., St. P., M. & O. Ry., St. Paul.

He Was a Rude Man.

"John," said the young wife who prides herself on being sensible right up to the limit, "just notice how easy-fitting my new shoes are."

"Yes, I see," answered John.

"And, John," she continued, "do you know why I always get my shoes so large?"

"Oh," replied the ungallant other half of the sketch, "I suppose it's because you have such big feet."

A Fine Kidney Remedy.

Mr. A. S. Hitchcock, East Hampton, Conn. (The Chalice) says if any sufferer from Kidney and Bladder Disease will write him he will direct them to the part of home cure he used. He makes no charge whatever for the favor.

Similar but Different.

"Hello, there, cully!" exclaimed the bank burglar as he encountered an acquaintance. "Are you still picking pockets?"

"Sure," answered the light-fingered gent; "but I've got a new scheme for doing it that sidecracks the police."

"Put me wise," said the b. b.

"All right, but keep it mum," answered the other. "I'm running a railway lunch counter. See?"

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children, teething, softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain, cures wind colic. 25 cents a bottle.

A Woman Well Informed.

Mrs. Kicker—Is Mrs. Jones a well-informed woman?

Mrs. Bocker—Yes, indeed; her cook has lived with all the other families in the neighborhood.

Hadley Revived.

Son (just from Yale)—President Hadley says money should not be life's aim.

Father—Exactly! You should not aim at it; you should get it.

Appalled Him.

City Nephew—Yes; the dinner our club gave cost $10 per plate.

Uncle Hi—Great horsefat! An' what did the saucers an' other stuff cost?

Dangerous Place.

Ernie—Are tunnels really dangerous?

The Bachelor—Should say so. I knew a man who kissed a girl in a tunnel one time and he had to marry her.

Willie Winterman—And so you won't marry me?

Mamie Montana—Why, how perfectly ridiculous you are, Willie. Why, you're nothing but an American!

Quite Another Matter.

"Before I give you my answer," said the fluffy-haired summer girl, "I would like to know if you are in a position to keep me in the style to which I have always been accustomed?"

"If the styles don't change too often I am," replied the wise youth. "Otherwise the odds are in favor of my going broke."

Contributing Causes.

Miss Ascum—Did you really attend her wedding?

Miss Wryvell—Oh, yes, indeed! And I enjoyed myself immensely.

Miss Ascum—Did you, really?

Miss Wryvell—Her gown didn't fit her at all, and I heard several people say she looked a perfect fright.

Her Only Comment.

"Nevertheless, my dear," said the masculine portion of the combine, "there are a number of men in the world who are my mental inferiors."

"John," rejoined the wife of his bosom as she looked him square in the eye, "you were always a confirmed cynic."

Sure to Pop.

"Where you going, Jason?" queried the citizen of Kentucky.

"Goin' down to Matilda Lee's to pop the question," replied the lank youth.

"But you have your gun."

"Yes; if I find Bruce Bradley's ahead of me I'll pop him."

Pa's Wisdom.

Little Willie—What are dividends, pa?

Pa—Dividends, my son, are what the stockholders get after the directors appropriate their share.

Very Thing.

"What kind of lead pencil is best for writing a love letter?" asked the blushing maiden.

"Soft," replied the practical man, with a laugh.

Knew the Pattern.

Landlady—I'll have to request you to pay in advance, Mr. Shortleigh.

Shortleigh—Why, ain't my trunk good for a week's board?

Landlady—No; it looks like one of those emotional trunks.

Shortleigh—Emotional?

Landlady—Yes; one that is easily moved.

In the Right Place.

Askitt—By the way, what became of young Chillington who graduated with our class in '98. Cold, calculating sort of fellow, you remember?

Knowitt—Yes; I remember, and he's the same cold, calculating chap now that he was then. He's got a job as bill clerk with an ice company.

Uninterrupted Connubial Bliss.

"What of my future?" asked the fair maid.

"You will never know what grief or sorrow is," answered the fortune-teller.

"And—will I marry?" queried the fair one, anxiously.

"Sure," replied the visionary prophetess. "Four times."

Out at First.

"Sir," began the young man, "I came to ask your daughter's hand in marriage. I feel that I am not worthy of her, but——"

"Young man," interrupted the stern parent, "if fully agree with you on that point and there is nothing further to be said on the subject. Good evening, sir."

"A Good Thing."

Myer—I understand Scribbleton's new play is a failure. Have you seen it?

Gyer—Yes; there is one good thing in connection with it, however.

Myer—What is that?

Gyer—The "angel" who is putting up for its production.

Hopeless Case.

Tomdik—Have you learned to make the repairs on your automobile?

Bojax—No; and I'm afraid I never shall.

Tomdik—Why not?

Bojax—I haven't a bit of mechanical genius. Honestly, I don't believe I could invent a washing machine.

They Surely Will.

Young Microbe—And so we are parasites, and are killing the man we are in?

Old Microbe—That's the case, exactly.

"And you say he has summoned the doctors?"

"Yes."

"What will the doctors do?"

"Can't tell yet, but I am sure of one thing; they will call us hard names."

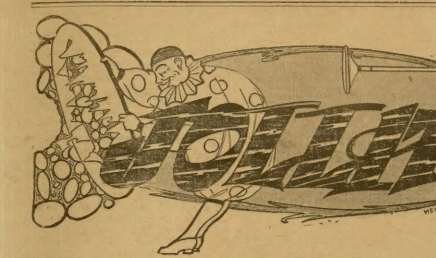
Conclusive.

"Has anything definite been heard about Midgwell, who went out West some time ago and disappeared?"

"Only a four-word telegram that came to his friends the other day. It said: 'They were not mushrooms.'"

He—You should not object to my bald head. It doesn't matter so much what is outside as what's inside the head.

She—Mercy! But since you suggest it, your head does look like a sofa pillow. Is it stuffed with hair?



Somewhat Sarcastic.

"I have always had a horror of premature interment, don't you know," remarked De Boreem, "or, in other words of being buried alive."

"Pshaw!" exclaimed Miss Cutting, "you are foolish to worry about the impossible." by some of our greatest thinkers."

He Recognized Them.

"Our minister gave voice to some great thoughts in his talk this morning," said the good deacon.

"Yes," replied the village librarian, "thoughts, in fact, that have been thought

Hamlet Brutus—But, madam, you are not heavy enough to play the part of Ophelia.

Miss Frizzle—But my father has plenty of money and he would pay you a hundred dollars to put me on the stage in that part.

Hamlet Brutus—Have you the hundred dollars with you?

Miss Frizzle—I have.

Hamlet Brutus—That makes you heavy enough.

A Marine Secret.

Young Lady (out sailing)—What makes the mast shine so?

Cathcat Captain—Grease.

"What good does the grease do?"

"Saves lives."

"Whose?"

"The lives of young ladies who would otherwise want to stand on the bow."

Not a Success.

Lowe Comedy—Hamm made his debut in vaudeville last night.

Hi Tragedy—Yes; it was a monologue, wasn't it?

Lowe Comedy—Not exactly. Hamm intended it to be, but the audience chimed in with a few choice remarks before he got fairly started.

Between Friends.

Ernie—Yes, Jack proposed by telephone today. I almost accepted him.

Ethel—Then it was a close call?

Ernie—Oh, no, a far call. He used the long-distance telephone.

A Restful Life.

Young Lady—I hate railway traveling, as a rule, but when we were South I found a perfectly lovely little railroad. It was just too sweet.

Caller—In what way?

Young Lady—It was so quiet and restful, and they never had any time-tables to bother with.

An Occasional Change.

Leavitt—How are things at the old boarding house, anyway? Get bacon and eggs every morning, as usual?

Stayer—Oh, no; we get an occasional change now.

Leavitt—You don' say so?

Stayer—Yes; some mornings we only get bacon.

Disgusting Ignorance.

Cholly—Why did you discharge your man?

Algy—He was too ignowant. Whenevah I was writing a lettah and wanted to know how to spell a word, he had to look in the dictionawy.

A Friend of Humanity.

Friend—What are you at now?

Inventor—Greatest thing of the age. Millions in it! I am making a steam man—regular man, all iron and steel, with steam as the motive power.

"Can he draw a wagon?"

"N—o; I'm afraid not."

"Carry burdens, perhaps?"

"N—o; he'd upset."

"Might row a boat, maybe?"

"Too heavy."

"Might fix him so he could tend the furnace?"

"Couldn't possibly."

"Or carry the baby?"

"Too risky."

"Then what in creation will he be good for? Where are the millions to come in?"

"I shall rent him out to break in new shoes."

A Big Difference, Usually.

Studious Boy—What is the meaning of "market value" and "intrinsic value?"

Father—The "market value" is the price you pay for a thing. "Intrinsic value" is what you get when you sell it to a second-hand dealer.

Scientists in Real Life.

First Passenger—Who is that man drinking from that rusty mug chained to the water-cooler?

Second Passenger—That is Professor De Science, author of "Disease Germs in the Communion Cup."

No Judge.

Young Artist—It's an outrage to have such an ignoramus as Puffers on a hanging committee.

Friend—No judge of art, eh?

Young Artist—He is a half-idiot. Why, sir, he thought my cows were horses.

Horrible.

St. Peter—You married for money I believe?

Fair Spirit—Y-e-s.

St. Peter—You may come in, but you will have to spend eternity with the man you married.

Hot Reception.

There was once a cat named Mariah,
Who to sing in high C did aspiah;
In the midst of her wail
Came off a gale,
That had previously been near the fish.

A Practical Dramatist.

Friend—Why do you kill off so many people in every act?

Dramatist—The company is small, and that is the only way I can work in all the characters.

The Doctor Silenced.

The Doctor—You regard society as merely a machine, do you? What part of the machinery do you consider me, for instance?

The Professor—You are one of the cranks.

Chose the Wrong One.

Bleeker—Say, old chap, that cigar you gave me yesterday was a dandy.

Baxter—How careless of me.

Fools From Birth.

He—The fact is that you women make fools of the men.

She—Sometimes, perhaps; but sometimes we don't have to.

AGENTS WANTED

$200. A MONTH

One reliable man or woman in each county as manager, to exhibit, take orders and appoint agents for Harrison's Oil Gas Stoves for cooking and heating. Wonderful invention. Every stove guaranteed. Every home needs one. Sells at sight. Big profits. Manufacture Gas Works. Absolutely safe. Enormous demand. Thousands sold weekly. Chemical, patented fuel. Exclusive territory. Valuable terms FREE. Write today.

World Mfg. Co., 2174 World Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

$32 A WEEK SALARY AND ALL EXPENSES to Men with rig to introduce IMPERIAL MYCO-PADS. Address IMPERIAL MYCO-PAD CO., 1 Imperial Bldg., CANTON, O.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

AGENTS WANTED to sell the Children of Morris Heights Library, Lessing, Shaler, Hall, Fiske, Fiske Memorial, Miller, Kinsley, Keith, Hill, Hillside, Kenyon, Kerr, Hillside, Kenyon, Kerr, Hillside, Kenyon, Kerr Links of Love.

(Continued from page seven.)

and fired upon, and I was severely wounded. I bear the scar yet. But I was not left to meet punishment for aiding a man to live-nor, if I was borne away in safety; my uncle and you, perhaps, and others, rushed upon us, and Gerald Grey bounded himself before his fire my uncle fell. I was brought here, nursed most tenderly through long weeks of illness following my wound, and—became the mistress of Gerald Grey."

The tiny hand slipped from the back of the chair to her pocket, and reappeared with a small pistol. Bonnie Beside had never seen without that weapon since her flight; she had a presentiment that she would need it some day.

"Leave at once, sir, or I will kill you in your tracks! Leave, I say!"

The man saw that the woman was in deadly earnest, and his face paled, and he essayed to speak.

"Not one word! If you do not instantly leave, I will fire."

It was no plaything she held in her hand, but a derringer—a deadly weapon—and with a curse the man turned on his heel and strode towards the gate.

There he halted and said:

"I'll have my revenge on you, girl, one of these days you shall hug to your heart the dead form of Gerald Grey!"

The woman shook her head, and the man disappeared.

With a curse he started towards the woman; but hurrying feet were heard approaching, and he turned and dashed away, and was seen no more.

This remarkable story of love and folly and crime will be continued next week. All Ledger subscribers are entitled to our free cameras and patterns as announced on pages thirteen and fifteen.

THE UNSEEN WOMAN.

BY G. B. BURGIN.

Half-way up the valley rose the Trappist Monastery of Mahota. Although the best knows of winter had just fallen, the Ottawa River was not yet frozen. In spite of the perpetual silence of the brethren, in the outbuildings of the monastery there were signs of active preparations for the coming cold. The cattle had been called up from distant fields, and the lay brother who usually spent the late summer and autumn in the meadows in the open air at the back of the monastery, now sought shelter by the kitchen fire, where he was sure of coming winter. On the hills surrounding the monastery scores of naphtha stoves, tasteless and rigid, the dull green of occasional gaps showing sombrely against the leaden sky. Habitants, bringing milk to the cheese factory, shook their heads knowingly as they protested that the rapidly approaching snowfall—a blanket of white, which would shut them from the world—would not be spring. The coming of the snow always brought with it a feeling of relief, although they were provisioned to stand a winter siege, and would be snugly in their little houses during the winter as squirrels in a nest.

Inside the monastery barn the monks were busily engaged fixing up stalls for the large herd of cows in the lower portion of there. Most of the monks had tied their brown robes round their waists; the only sounds which broke the stillness were the occasional buzz of a saw, or the ringing of a hammer on a nail when the rules of their order forbade the monks to speak. They worked in silence, only breaking it at intervals to wipe the sweat from their brows as the monastery bell struck every quarter of an hour to remind them that they were mortal. In the little burial ground at the monastery there was a half-dug grave which served to fulfil the same purpose. When a monk feared that he was near to the graveyard and lay down in the half-filled grave. Then he came back to his work and prayed in silence as he toiled.

It was a hard life of constant repetition, prayer and work. Most of the monks, who labored in the barn, bore upon their brows the seal of silence. Some were very good, some bad, some divinely peaceful and happy, others diabolically wicked. But upon them all was the ineffaceable brand which separated them from their fellows. Every man had voluntarily quitted the world for a living tomb; whether they regretted it or not, there was no return for those steps. What use had the world for a man who was false to his vows? If he left the monastery he would be shunned and despised; if he remained there, he could make himself to perpetual silence, shut out all the sweetness of living, become practically a dead man who still walked the earth brooding over the wrongs or sufferings of his past life.

The monks entered their dormitories at 8, rose at 2 in the morning, and worshipped for three hours in the monastery chapel. Then they went forth into the fields after a scanty breakfast of bread and water, and labored until midday. There was a short rest for recreation and dinner, and the monotonous round began again until the evening meal. The rest of each monk's food was about a cent a day. The brethren made their own clothes and shoes. All absolute familiarity with death had robbed it of all terrors. If a monk died, he was carried coffinless in his brown robe to the graveyard, there

"To take his fill
Of deep and liquid forgetful of all ill."

That was all. He was made one with nature, his place knew him no more.

When the noonday bell rang, Brother Hyacinthe, tall, swarthy, muscular, thin, laid down his saw with an air of relief, folded his hands, and walked slowly in the direction of the monastery. Once on the threshold, he raised his eyes to the sky with a despairing look, gave an expressive shrug of his brawny shoulders, and went down the long passage which led to the corridor where the monks assembled for their hour of recreation. Half way down the corridor he stopped to gaze through an open door—the door of a meanly-furnished little room in which a great stove gave out an overpowering heat. A mild-faced monk sat at a small table making robes for the lay brothers to wear. Long strips of heavy material out of which the robes were fashioned hung from nails on the wooden walls. Great irons were being heated at the stove to press the seams of the completed garments, and as Brother Hyacinthe looked into the room his eyes fell on the frail, stooping form of Father Colombe. Something in his face was thin and worn from much fasting; he coughed pathetically from time to time his face was angelically sweet. When he looked up and met the fiery glance of Brother Hyacinthe, he crossed himself and turned away with a sigh.

It was easy to see that these two had met in the world, that there was some bond of love or hatred between them from which neither could escape—some bond which was the secret of the monastery. Each man knew more bitter by the enforced silence of monastic days. Where one was, the other was strictly forbidden to go. For years past the savage hate in Brother Hyacinthe's heart, in spite of prayer and penance, had been distastedly accumulated. By some strange chance, in the world which each man had mostly half-blotted from their memories, they had loved the same woman. And they had loved her with a fierce devotion by the raging madness of despair, and unknown to each other, entered the monastery of Mahota, there to escape all thought of this woman whom they had both loved and one had slain them both as surely as though she had put the knife against their throats and driven it to the hilt.

But even in the soul-killing routine of the monastery there were hours apart from her. When they prayed to the virgin, her eyes were the eyes of the woman they had loved; when they went forth into the fields to perform their daily tasks, she moved beside them, unseen, yet ever present; when they returned through the dim shades of falling night, weary, hungry, half dead from fatigue, she walked between and drew them to her cell, sometimes. Brother Hyacinthe saw her standing at the head of his pallet as the convent bell sounded the long dormitory and the midnight silence was broken by the restless sighing and coughing of his brethren in their cells. At that time did Brother Colombe find peace. Over and over again would Brother Hyacinthe, the tall, fasting and privations of his past life, lie with his nostrils, tight steps the wooden floor of the dormitory, his head bowed on his knotted hands, muttering imprecations against the woman he hated. After these outbursts, however, he always sought the abbot, confessed his sin, did penance, and obtained that soul might grow more become white, he inflicted upon himself the severest penance. Then he would struggle her with loving tenderness and scourged his shoulders with a knotted rope until blood flowed.

Brother Hyacinthe passed slowly along the corridor, scowling at the door of Brother Colombe. He prayed for him: he did not want to be prayed for by Brother Colombe. There was still between that woman between them, the woman who persecuted them both, the woman with the cold, gray eyes, the gleaming white shoulders, the loveliness of which had driven Brother Hyacinthe which dragged him down to hell. He cursed her, and strode on. If he could only revisit the world, he would be rich enough to buy from Jimb, disfigure that fair face, crush her lying life of cowardice, so that she could only meet her again! Only once! only once! He would tear that woman's eyes out, hot irons and sear her eyes out! Ah-h-h! If it were possible! If it were possible!

Brother Hyacinthe put down the rope with which he had been pressing a newly-finished robe, and with a heavy frown, entreating footsteps of Brother Hyacinthe, died away. Presently Colombe, laying aside his work, entered the corridor, and went straight to his favorite window seat, where he was surrounded by stained with pictures of saints. For more than a month past Brother Colombe had been engaged in painted the Holy Virgin and Child. Even in his dull heart there was a thrill of exultation as he thought how full of promise the painting was, how it needed but a few more strokes of the brush to be complete. What was his dismay as he drew near the window and found that the artist had carelessly upset a glass of water over the material, and that the work of more than a month was practically ruined.

Brother Colombe knelt down and prayed that he might not in his guilty heart deem this the work of an enemy. Then he took up his brush and commenced to repair the damage.

He did not know that a few yards away, Brother Hyacinthe regarded him with intense hate. He saw the bowed head, his eyes blazing like living coals. When Brother Hyacinthe saw the meek monk once more seated, he clenched his hands, and, with slow, measured steps withdrew. As he went out there were several lay brothers kneeling before the various Stations of the Cross. A ghostly light seemed full of fiery flame, for an irresistible temptation had suddenly taken possession of him. He could no longer endure the proximity of the man he hated—the man who had rendered it impossible for him to escape from all memory of the woman he still loved. He would ruin this man and himself at the same time and thus find a way to escape.

He stole silently through the long corridor. Perpetual vigils, the haunting presence of the Unseen Woman, the scanty food and upsetting routine of his daily life, had done their work. For the moment he was insane, with all a madman's cunning.

Alone in the long stone corridor, he looked carefully around, but there was no one in sight, for the farm hands of the monastery had all gone to their midday meal. Even the swineherd was not to be seen. The only sound which broke the stillness was the dull, low moaning of the chapel bell. It seemed to him that it knelled the passing of his own soul.

For a moment he hesitated, then stole quickly down the corridor, and, coming to the window where Brother Colombe had been at work, looked furtively in. There was no one there.

Before leaving the room, Brother Colombe had heaped fresh logs in the stove. They crackled and sputtered and cast a cheerful glow over the stone floor. The reflection of the flames danced upon the ebony walls; the irons which Brother Colombe had placed in front of the stove were almost red-hot.

Brother Hyacinthe looked round with an air of fascination, and several pieces of the rough, thick cloth, and a handful of shavings, and pushed them into the stove.

In a moment the cloth and shavings began to flare up. They would die away too quickly to suit his purpose.

He thrust one end of a long wooden bench in the flames, and then he seized the other wooden wall, and went away. No one would come near the place for at least a quarter of an hour.

He returned to the corridor and surveyed Brother Colombe with a thankful attitude at work with malicious satisfaction. So absorbed was the monk in their devotions that at first they noticed nothing; then, the acrid smell of burning cloth and wood penetrated to his nostrils, and earth from which they had so completely detached themselves. A strange grey thicker and thicker, they suddenly realised that the monastery was on fire. Even in such an emergency like this, not daring to speak, looked pitifully at one another. An ardent desire led them to follow him, and one by one they glided away through the line of grey smoke to seek for safety.

Brother Colombe was the last to leave the corridor. He had suddenly become absorbed in his efforts to repair the damage done to the painting, and failed to see the approach of the fire until the smoke entered his nostrils and made him cough. Then he looked up, and found himself in a world of gray smoke, through which flashed the fiery glare of the flames.

As Brother Hyacinthe pointed a menacing finger at Brother Colombe's little room, it suddenly dawned on the good monk that he was responsible for the conflagration. He uttered a cry. Hastily rising from his knees, he spread a sheet of paper over the damaged picture, and glided through the gray mist towards the door. It was impossible to see.

When he looked around in bewilderment, the eyes of Brother Hyacinthe still glared at him.

Again he felt along the walls and again encountered it. When he looked up, there her Hyacinthe was beside him. The rules of the monastery forbade speech, but ever human cry spoke eloquently they were the eyes of Brother Colombe that encountered Brother Hyacinthe and placed a trembling hand upon his arm.

Brother Hyacinthe shook off Brother Colombe's fingers as if they burned him, and opened the door. Brother Colombe believed him thankfully, under the delusion that Brother Hyacinthe was endeavoring to alarm the monks.

Once outside the door, Brother Hyacinthe laid down on the ground, occasionally thrusting out an unwilling hand to drag Brother Colombe forward.

After what seemed an interminable space of time, they reached the farm-house which was the first which the fire raged fiercely. Outside, they heard the wild clanging of bells and saw the glare of the alarm fires on the surrounding villages. The narrow stream of water by the valley had been nearly dry; there were only two large wells in front of the monastery, and these worked so that water was slowly drawn to the top. The buckets seemed pitifully small.

Yonder rose the flames through the thickening smoke-wreaths. "At last! at last!" groaned Brother Hyacinthe. "The devil hath delivered you into my hands at last!" And he thrust a bony fingers closed around Brother Colombe's throat.

Brother Colombe made no resistance. His hands clasped in the attitude for the soul of the woman he had once loved with an earthly passion. In the face of imminent death he now saw her clad in the raiment of the celestial queen. Her eyes looked into his with tender love; they implored pardon, forgiveness, were full of sorrow for the sins of earth.

Brother Hyacinthe shifted his hold and dragged his victim round, with a great effort to cast him into the blazing room. Suddenly he felt himself in the staggered against the doorway.

A white hand thrust him into the fiery furnace, he fell backward, the flames swallowed him up.

Brother Colombe felt himself grasped by the soft hand of a woman. She laid a finger on his lips as she led him forth from the flames. At the touch of her healing finger he opened his eyes and saw the gates of the Celestial City.

A little distance away, despairing monks dashed in vain of water against the monastery walls.

He was alone.

Quality Not an Issue.

Reginald—Won't you sing for us, Miss Muriel?

Miss M.—Oh, I daren't sing after such good music as we've been having.

Reginald (gallantly)—But I'd rather listen to your singing than to any amount of good music.

Not New.

Lady of the House (impressively)—Bridget, that pitcher you broke this morning belonged to my great grandmother.

Bridget (greatly relieved)—Well, O'm glad o' that! Shure, O'l was afraid it was somethin' yez had just bought lately.

Sick Made Well Weak Made Strong.

Marvelous Elixir of Life Discovered by Famous Doctor-Scientist That Cures Every Known Ailment.

Wonderful Cures Are Effected That Seem Like Miracles Performed — The Secret of Long Life of Olden Times Revived.

The Remedy Is Free to All Who Send Name and Address.

After years of patient study, and delving into the dusty records of the past, as well as following modern experiments in the science of medicine, Prof. James W. Kidd, 128 Baltes Building, Fort Wayne, Ind., makes the startling announcement that he has surely discovered the elixir of life. That is a strong statement, but if a mysterious compound, known only to himself, produced as a result of the years he has spent in searching for this precious life-giving fluid, to cure with certainty diseases that is known to the human body. There is no doubt of the doctor's sincerity in making his claim and the remarkable cures that he is daily receiving from all over the country, are sufficient reason for which he advances it as the remarkable success of his discovery. Dr. Kidd is willing to send absolutely no risk in connection with it, and any one afflicted with any form of disease, from consumption, fevers, consumption, coughs, to the most chronic cases of kidney, liver and all affections of the throat, chills and any other ailment, are surely invited to write at once for a free sample of this remedy. It purifies the entire system, and if taken regularly restores normal nerve power, circulation and vigor of perfect health is produced at once. To the doctor all systems alike and equally diseased. "The Elixir of Life." Send for the remedy today to the address given above. State what you want to be cured of and the sure remedy will be sent you free, by return mail.

DR. JAMES WILLIAM KIDD.

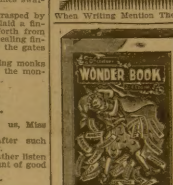
500 SHAVES for 25c.

Without a razor, soap or water by using our famous Rubberset shaving stick. Lasts as long as the strongest hand by simply rubbing it over the face. Will not dry on the skin. Convenient, Quick, Perfect. Always ready for use. Can be carried in the vest pocket. Will keep for years. Stop quote the skin, sharp razors make ingrowing hairs. Soothes the skin. Is etched and sore. The Depilatory Stone prevents shaving cuts. Try one and be convinced. Thousands of them sold every year. Send postpaid, 25 cents. Agents wanted. Rubberset Co., 1.H. Genesee St., Room 1, Auburn, N. Y.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.



This book contains hundreds of valuable things such as Fortune-Telling, Puzzles, Dreams, Charms, Games, Lucky Signs, Astrology, Cards, Love, Tables, Physiology, Psychology. It is filled with valuable things. Don't buy fakes. This is the genuine. Only 25 cents by mail, postpaid. 10 cents, 5 for 25 cents. Address

BLADAN LEJUR,
Room 401,
Reyno Building
CHICAGO, ILLS.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

Frank Vaughan's Mistake.

"It is no use, Edith; we can never be more to each other than we are now. We are both poor, and, in addition, I am up to the collar-bone in debt.

"But—but you love me," she asked, tamidly.

"Love! Bah! What is love? A [illegible] ical euphony, don't you know, today, [illegible] Perhaps I did love you once—at least, [illegible] can't live on sentiment. One day our feelings lead us astray; next, stern circumstance compels us to be more philosophical. We have been wrong—we pay for [illegible] me, and I for being foolish enough to encourage it. But, Edith, our [illegible] tine courtship must cease from tonight. You are not the poverty-stricken [illegible] know, while I—well, society expects great things from me. You must see how absurd a thought marriage is for us."

"Absurd!" she murmured, [illegible] ly [illegible] ting that such levity and cruelty [illegible] sible from the man to whom she had [illegible] pledged her troth some months ago.

"Yes, utterly absurd. Now, [illegible] Look at the matter in a reasonable light. I don't want to hurt your feelings, I know, but you are aware that your [illegible] my uncle's house would of course [illegible] ideas of marriage between us. Of course, you will always have a friend in me. I shall always be glad to advise, and——"

"Frank," she interrupted.

"Don't be hysterical, Edith. There's really no need for any fuss, you know. You [illegible] are a girl. But I have a position to maintain. You haven't. Come, let us [illegible] Markham, the young [illegible] He's head over ears in love with you, and—and you couldn't have any difficulty with him. He'd make a good husband, and—all that sort of thing."

The poor deluded girl hung her head in silence. Her breast heaved tumultuously as she endeavored to suppress her emotion. She trembled in every limb, and for a brief moment the tears stood in her fine, blue eyes. But Edith Malvern, the poor, friendless little orphan, had more philosophy in her nature than the heartless man walking by her side in his uncle's grounds gave her credit for.

This was a staggering blow to her. To [illegible] ach of her hopes to the ground, and her heart stabbed with one sudden, unexpected lunge, was torture in the extreme. But there was that within her which enabled her to hide her feelings in check. Such words were concentrated cruelty and bitterness. But they had unlocked and opened a portion within her heart which she had previously been unaware existed there. It was like a new sense and led to be thankful for what she had escaped from. A man whose opinions of love and of marriage—the most sacred institution and bond in the universe—were so absolutely debased, must be worthless. To have been compelled to call such a man "husband" would have been, to one of her nature, more fearful than this sudden shattering of her hopes. Had she discovered his hateful, true invardness after she had been irrevocably yoked to him, her life would have been one prolonged misery.

Calmly she withdrew her hand from his arm. Somehow it seemed suddenly unsurped. She paused by his side, and, looking steadily into his face, said:

"It shall be as you wish. Yes; I have been foolish. I am, as you have said, poor, and of no account in the world. I am penniless as well as penniless. It—It would be—absurd to think of marriage. Let us forget the past—be as though we had never met. Your words have forever obliterated the past in my mind. I could not, I would not, be your wife, though all the world urged me to. But your debts, your position! How are you going to extricate yourself from it, and maintain the other?"

"How unsophisticated you are, Edith."

"But you surely do not intend to make marriage your emancipator?" she asked.

He smiled at her earnest, pitying, semi-credulous look, and then replied:

"Well, perhaps such a proposal seems—a peculiar to you, but, my dear girl, look at things sensibly. There's Mary, for instance, my cousin. She's an heiress. I believe she is well, thinks a great deal about me. You must have seen it, Edith. Now——"

"But, for my sake, think of what you are going to do. Do not deceive and betray Miss Mary. Pause before you attempt to win her love for such sordid ends. Is it not enough that you should chill one heart without deliberately wrecking another? She is of such a disposition that when she discovered—as the undoubtedly would some day—that you had more regard for her wealth than for herself, it would kill her. I entreat you, consider. For myself, I care not; I can bear the revelation. But Mary—no, she shall not be thus deceived. Oh, consider!"

* * * * *

There was a great deal of consideration in Frank Vaughan's nature. He was full of it, but unfortunately, it was all for himself. He did consider Mary, truly, but not in the manner enjoined by the noble girl he had deceived. He considered his cousin a Heaven-sent blessing. She was a good match, with plenty of money in her own right from her deceased mother, and as heiress to her father's great accumulations. She was just the wife for him. True, she was a trifle weak—but then, that would not matter, as she could follow the bent of her own inclinations, and, with her money, he could do as he liked. On the whole, Edith had taken things very calmly. Ah! she was heroine

Adrift on a Junk; Or, Boy Sailors of the China Sea.

By St. George Rathborne.

Begun in No. 29, July 18. Subscriptions can begin with that issue, or back copies can be procured from news stands, or our agents, or by mail from office of publication.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE GHOST THAT GROANED.

It was now Julian's privilege to translate what he received from Kwang Chow just as he had seen the captain receiving certain signals from another ship, and by referring to the code-book making common English of the fluttering junk is haunted," was the first astonishing translation with which he favored his expectant audience; whereat Tressle uttered a cry of delight, for it had long been his secret ambition to interpret [illegible] while Bob on the [illegible] ully rather doubtful of anything [illegible] on the supernatural, and accordingly gave a gasp of horror at Julian's words as now in a position where he might have [illegible] searching the quarters of the sailors, in the hope of finding a bit of forgotten opium with which to [illegible] touhache—anybody, a poor excuse for a man more, and we'll take it [illegible] had the toothache, poor fellow, I'm frightened as [illegible] as prying under every bunk energetically, when he heard a most awful groan which he says was the worst ever, and Kwang ought to know, for I guess he's run across some pretty tough ones in his time.

"Of course you know that the Chinese mighty superstitious, and believe in a personal devil that is always busy trying to do a fellow a bad turn. They call the Evil Spirit the Fung-Shuy, or something like that, and everything is done to appease or confuse him and his imps—at a funeral clouds of red paper with marks on every one, are scattered about, under the impression that the old fellow is curious, and will stop to pick up every bit, giving the body a chance to get in the grave first. Oh, there are an interesting lot, I'm telling you right now.

"Very well; now here's our friend Kwang Chow, who vows the devil is lying below, willing to get hold of me one by one; and what worries him so badly is the fact that he hasn't any of those prayer papers to offer the fellow in order to keep him guessing until we can get off the boat.

Julian laughed aloud at the finished speaking, and the girl followed suit; but Bob looked quite serious.

"Yes; but he heard something," he asserted, shaking his head.

"Perhaps we can rut up some stuff, and make prayer-papers," suggested Julian, with fine irony.

"Come now, this is no joking matter, old fellow. Do you expect to go down and see what scared the poor chap?" asked Bob, coldly.

"Right away, and I half expected to find that some pet cat or dog has been left behind when the crew took French leave; or it may be a sick China-man—sick for home, you know, and naturally thinking of leaving a chum to his fate."

"Perhaps down with the plague—ugh!" groaned Bob, dismally.

"Oh, stop that croaking and come with me. I saw a lantern in the cabin, that will answer our purpose, even if it is a tough proposition."

"Then you want me to go along; of course, I'm willing enough, but who's to look after the ship when we're all below what if a squall or something came up suddenly with the tiller lashed that way? Why, we'd all get drowned before you could call out, 'Long live the king.' It's for you to say, though, Skipper," with a sad look at Julian that made Julian grin with delight.

"I want to go with Julian; please let me," said Tressle, at this juncture, and she would not take no for an answer, evidently.

"Come on, then, Miss Second Mate, and we'll interview that old ghost or know the reason why."

"I'll get the lantern," she cried, darting back into the cabin.

Bob looked a bit foolish, but his feelings were dreadfully harried, and he hurried over to the stern and seized the tiller so eagerly that one might have fancied a black squall must be bearing down upon them at full race-horse speed, wherein the sky was as clear as crystal, and not a whiff of danger anywhere around.

Kwang now realized what they were about to do, and really the poor fellow was greatly concerned over the possible and fate of the young American whom he had come to worship as his patron saint; he begged him not to go, and finding his prayers unavailing, by a great effort conquered his fears, which were a part of his very nature, having been handed down from remote ancestors, and made out to follow the adventurous pair into the depths.

Perhaps it was a novelty about the thing that attracted his curiosity, for never in all his experience had he known human beings to thus defy the dreaded evil spirit who ever watched to get the better of poor mortals here below.

Now, Julian was not entirely free from anxiety, though he may not have have shown it to the others; but he could not say what it was that had frightened the Chinaman. What Bob had said about the black [illegible] had not been entirely [illegible] prevailing in certain quarters, and it was even possible that its appearance on board the junk had caused the sudden flight of the crew, and not as he surmised the fear of the vessel sinking. That was a pleasant prospect, truly.

Once below the deck, he advanced slowly, holding in one hand the rude native lantern, fashioned somewhat like those in a century or two back in old England, while the other hand gripped that ferocious Bashi-Bazouk blade of the needle point and keen edge, with which he felt he could give a good account of himself in conflict with phantom [illegible] place was [illegible] and the odor worse than [illegible] smoked so [illegible] only that one thing was [illegible] with its villainous [illegible]

All was silent save the customary sounds; the night creak of the timbers, and of a junk is moving at a fair clip through [illegible]

"Bring on your ghosts," said Julian, drastically having his pistol [illegible] four hours after the [illegible] of one who dares a despised antagonist to advance and give battle.

At that moment as if in answer to his challenge there came a [illegible] groan, only of a character to make [illegible] Julian's blood run cold. Tressle clapped her hands faintly, though delighted because after all the affair did not turn out quite as [illegible] which action surprised the sailor lad not a little, for he had loved the girl more for her shade more valiant than himself.

"Come on, Bob," and Julian demanded quickly, his "sword" held at an angle best fitted to impale any charging [illegible]

Bob, with a look of [illegible] buck," came immediately from Tressle, whose bright eyes were flashing with excitement and eagerness.

The young knight never hesitated an instant; he knew he dared not, unless he were [illegible] ash the point of [illegible] but [illegible] several bunks on the left, holding out the lantern, he peered into the depths of its [illegible]

Well, there was something in that lower bunk beyond a shadow of a doubt; and when Julian had taken a few more steps less as to what the dreaded bad spirit of the Chinese might be like, he felt positive that this indeed no mere airy style of ghost a human being to be anything supernatural.

Then he made a startling discovery that aroused his curiosity still more, for he found that the occupant of the bunk was tied securely with withes, after a fashion of a binder method, so that he was utterly unable to move his arms, and the groaning was instrument of torture, such as only a Chinaman could invent, was simply [illegible] making a sound beyond a groan.

Julian felt relieved of all terror he had felt in connection with contagious disease, and he no longer hesitated to touch the bound man, but with a few quick strokes of his [illegible] he had dragged the unknown out upon the floor, so that he might be better able to cut his bonds.

To his amazement, he looked upon the bearded face of a foreigner, perhaps an Anglo-Saxon, though [illegible] darkened in a shadow of what he once might have been.

He had [illegible] the last [illegible] of the steel as the blade was drawn across the withes, perhaps he imagined his end must have come, however, as the [illegible] sudden jar at each of the [illegible] bonds fell off.

Casting aside the weapon when it had carried out its part in the rescue, Julian bent over the poor fellow, uttering words of good cheer; but it was to deaf ears he addressed himself, for evidently his patient had fainted.

"Get Bob down here to help me carry him on deck," he said to the girl, who immediately darted forth on her errand of mercy, leaving Julian alone with the object of the Chinese pirates.

Bob came hastily, even if he did cast wary glances to the right and to the left as if in fear of Kwang's pet devil.

Willingly he took hold and between them the unconscious stranger was lugged from the foul-smelling forecastle up on to the deck.

Here in the shade of the sail they laid him down, where the cooling breeze might fan his bearded cheeks and help revive him.

Bob ran for some water, but before he got back the man's eyes opened again, and he looked up into Julian and Tressle's faces with amazement and delight.

"Is it a dream?" he muttered, trembling with eagerness.

Julian assured him it was not, and that himself and companions were truly of flesh, that they had been wrecked, and had found the drifting junk just in time to save them-

FOUNTAIN PENS. If any reader of this paper is in need of a good fountain pen, pl ase write us for details. After grumbles and six days trial, money will be returned. If pe ...ased and so represented. Price $1.50. Safe arrival in San Antonio Guaranteed. W. W. WHITSEY, Mgr., 528 Superior St., Cleveland, Ohio

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger. When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

Fruit Growing in New Mexico.

"There are two small orchards on our place containing about 150 trees each — apples, peaches, plums, cherries and pears; all do well here. In fact the apples and peaches grown in these mountains far exceed in both size and flavor anything grown in the Rio Grande or Pecos Valleys. One great advantage we have here in fruit culture is that there are no insects or pests to mar or injure the fruit.

Mrs. J. W. SAUNDERS, Highrolls, New Mexico."

Conditions for fruit growing in New Mexico are perfect and the land is cheap.

Homeseekers' Excursions Southwest first and third Tuesdays each month. One fare plus $2.00 for the round trip; one-way tickets correspondingly low. Send to-day for illustrated literature, free.

Rock Island System

JOHN SEBASTIAN, Passenger Traffic Manager, CHICAGO, ILL.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger. When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

LUCKY "7" PUZZLE

$1000 TO OUR LUCKY READERS FREE!

In this square below are a lot of figure 7's. They are all jumbled up and mixed together so that they are hard to count. The idea of the puzzle is to count the number of figure 7's in the square. Every reader of this paper has a chance to win a prize. We know that very few persons can tell at once the exact number, but we are only giving prizes to one hundred persons, and also to 1246 other persons who come nearest to the correct number. With this number of chances to win, and with such a large amount of money to be given away, we feel sure that every reader of this paper will send a guess. The first prize is $500, the second $200, the third $100, the fourth $50, the next $25, the next $10, and the next 1240 persons in the contest get presents, the exact value of the presents is left to each.

In case two or more persons are tied for one prize then the prize is equally divided. There is no "catch" about this puzzle. It is simply a test of your ability to count correctly. The very figure is shown plainly but the figures are mixed up so that it takes a lot of patience and care to find out correctly the number. This contest closes [illegible] and we will announce the prize winners in the next issue of this paper. Don't delay, but send your guess at once, and you may be one of the lucky ones to win a prize.

HOW MANY FIGURES IN THIS SQUARE?

We are the publishers of Boyce's Weekly, which already has a circulation of over 2,000,000 copies each month. The subscription price is only 25 cents a year. The magazine is printed on book paper, handsomely illustrated in colors. It has a lot of interesting departments, dramatic news, household hints, stories, fashions, young folks' corner, and splendid stories by prominent writers. We want to get Boyce's Weekly into as many homes as possible, and the low subscription price will help us to do this. Many persons have decided to subscribe for it after getting one copy, and have ordered it sent monthly in the world for the price.

Every person who sends a guess will send in 25 cents for a year's subscription, which will entitle you to register one guess in the contest. Or if you send 50 cents you will get four year's subscriptions to the Woman's World, and be entitled to four counts. If you send $1.00 you will get eight year's subscriptions for yourself and your friends, and be entitled to eight counts. You can send for as many subscriptions as you like, and the more you send the greater increase you are under of chances to win prizes.

No puzzle answer will win the cash prize unless it is the correct number. In case there are more than one correct answer received, that actually correct and another sent in a guess of less one than actually correct they would tie for the prize of next one out, and so on down the line. A tie is not a disadvantage, because the prize will be divided equally between those who send in correct answers.

The counts must be all made out plainly, also your name and address. Send in your count as soon as you have made it. You may send in as many counts as you like.

CONDITIONS.—Each person must count the number of figure 7's in the square and fill in the correct number in the blank space provided for that purpose in the coupon below. Then send the coupon, together with 25 cents for a year's subscription to Boyce's Weekly, to the office of Boyce's Weekly, Boyce Building, Chicago. Ill. Each person who sends a guess will be entitled to register one guess in the contest. No one has the right to count the figures for another person. The count will not be accepted unless the 25 cents for the subscription to Boyce's Weekly is sent with the count. Each person who sends a guess will receive a receipt for the money and a notice that the guess has been registered. Be sure to send your guess before 5 p. m., December 15, 1903. In case of a tie between contestants, each one will be notified of the fact and requested to submit a new guess. Each one will be given a chance to compete for the prize. No one has the right to count the figures for another person. The count will not be accepted unless the 25 cents for the subscription to Boyce's Weekly is sent with the count. Each person who sends a guess will receive a receipt for the money and a notice that the guess has been registered. Be sure to send your guess before 5 p. m., December 15, 1903. In case of a tie between contestants, each one will be notified of the fact and requested to submit a new guess. Each one will be given a chance to compete for the prize. No one has the right to count the figures for another person. The count will not be accepted unless the 25 cents for the subscription to Boyce's Weekly is sent with the count. Each person who sends a guess will receive a receipt for the money and a notice that the guess has been registered. Be sure to send your guess before 5 p. m., December 15, 1903. In case of a tie between contestants, each one will be notified of the fact and requested to submit a new guess. Each one will be given a chance to compete for the prize.

HERE ARE THE PRIZES:

Each person answering this puzzle must fill in the number of figures in the square.

1 Prize for correct count	$500
1 Prize for nearest correct count	200
1 Prize next nearest	100
1 Prize next nearest	50
1 Prize next nearest	25
1240 Prize next nearest	10
Prize of presents given away below	6.00
1246 Prizes amounting to	$1000

In case two or more persons send the same count and are entitled to a prize the amount of the prize is divided equally.

Fill Out This Subscription and Count Blank.

WOMAN'S WORLD, Boyce Building, Chicago

Enclosed find 25 cents for one year's subscription to Woman's World, which entitles me to four counts. In case four counts in my Lucky "7" Puzzle count. I register my four counts the Mark below. Yours truly,

Name .....

Street, P. O., or Rural R. .....

Town .....

State .....

1st Count.	2nd Count.	3rd Count.	4th Count.

Note.—Simply write in your count in figures.

Address WOMAN'S WORLD, Boyce Bldg., Chicago.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger. When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

selves from a watery grave, and that they gladly welcomed another unfortunate to their ranks—if food or water would give him immediate satisfaction he had only to mention his wishes to have them granted. Whereupon, the poor chap actually wept, he was so tickled over the wonderful change that had taken place in his prospects.

Kwang, who had stared open-mouthed while they were carrying his Fung-Shuy out of the depths, now ran to bring water, and Tressele also aped to the cook's galley, where the fire still burned, and she could speedily get something calculated to give the abandoned sailor immediate succor.

Truly, he must have been enchanted with the outlook, and believed his lines had fallen in pleasant places, after enduring such horrors as fall to the lot of few mortals here below, whatever may be kept for them after death.

Julian could see unmistakable signs that the unfortunate had been a sailor at some time in his past, and it was only natural that his heart should go out to him with unusual force; because he, too, had a father in exile, supposed to be enduring tortures among the cruel natives of the South China coast.

What if this man should prove to possess some knowledge of that dear one whom he sought; what a miraculous thing it would be that he of all persons had been appointed to rescue him from death.

"You have been a prisoner among evil men, I take it?" he could not keep from asking, with the light of anticipation in his eyes.

The man nodded, though his ability to speak was fast returning, as his exclamation at sight of them proved.

"Has it been very long since you fell into their hands?" continued Julian.

"All of seven years, sir," returned the hairy one.

The boy began to tremble, for it was just about that length of time since his father had disappeared from the face of the earth, and was last seen in this locality; could it be that this man would prove to be a messenger, sent by a merciful Heaven, to tell him the story, and remove the mystery that had so long been a torture to his soul?

To his amazement, he looked upon the bearded face of a foreigner.

"And the name of your ship? Can you tell me that?" he asked, weakly, while the sailor surveyed his emotion with wonder.

"Aye, that I can, young sir, and I never want to sail the blue seas in a better craft than was the old Evangeline."

Julian swallowed something that seemed to stick in his throat for that had been the name of his father's ship, the luckless one on which he had taken his fatal voyage that had proved his last cruise.

"Tell me, are you Mate Merriweather?" he managed to say, with quivering lips.

"Alas Merriweather it was, though so many years have dragged by since last I heard it spoken that I began to doubt. But how should you know? Wherever have I met so likely a young lad as you? Seven years, sure, you'd have been but a small chap for the deck."

Julian had groped for the hard hand of the bearded man, and when he found it he squeezed it fiercely, while he was saying, brokenly:

"Oh, Mate Merriweather, don't you know, I'm the boy who gave you the knife on your birthday, and who rode on your shoulder when a little chap? Now you understand—I'm Julian!" he cried, for there was an answering pressure that told of awakened recollection.

The man staggered to his feet, holding on to the bamboo boom, for such was his excitement that he could no longer remain there on the deck.

"Julian, you Julian, the Captain's lad? Such a tall and manly fellow, it doesn't seem possible. It's hard to believe," he kept muttering, all the while his eyes remained glued on the face that was so filled with eager hope.

"But it is, all the same, and this is a happy hour for me. Now, I may know the truth and be rid of this agony of torture. Tell me, is he yet alive?"

His whole soul seemed wrapped up in the question, and the lad could his very heart stopped beating, such was the suspense under which he labored.

"He was, two weeks ago, when I escaped from the island. More than that, I'm unable to say, lad; but the chances are ten to one the Captain is still in the land o' the living!" answered the other, heartily.

Julian staggered back as weak as the emancipated man before him, for joy is able to steal one's strength as well as sorrow; and it was a wonderful revelation to this brave lad to hear that after they had mourned these seven years for the good captain who came not back after his vessel disappeared in the treacherous China Sea, the parent whom he had loved so well was not dead, but yet abode in the flesh, a forlorn captive, it seemed; but, thank Heaven, still alive and yearning after his dear ones across the seas.

CHAPTER XIV.

MATE MERRIWETHER'S STORY.

Tressele had heard all this with wonder and delight, for she knew about the strange mission that had brought Julian so far away from his home across the wide sea. Perhaps in his happiness she saw her own misery the more plainly, for had she not been deprived of a father's affection recently; but, brave girl that she was, this feeling found no expression in words or looks to mar the new-found ecstacy of her young champion and protector.

She was close by in the galley making sandwiches while the coffee heated, and every word came plainly to her ears.

Presently Julian recovered to some degree, and was able to ask questions, and the way in which he bombarded Merriwether with these kept that old salt busy framing answers.

Then Tressele called them all into the cabin to have supper, as the evening was close at hand, and over this meal the late prisoner of the buccaneers was made to regret all he had said, and add to it such facts as had any bearing on the subject.

Thus by degrees they had the whole story, and Julian hung on every thing that had a connection with his father, much as a miser might bubble over his shining gold. Picture to yourself, if you can, what his emotions must have been under such strange circumstances, and surely it will appear that he had good reason for unusual excitement, that caused all other things to drift away from his mind.

And they sat around listening as though entranced, while Merriwether told how the ship was wrecked, leaving himself, the captain and seven others of the crew in the hands of those who piled the trade of Cochin-China; how the captain and one who varied life with more or less piratical business were separated from the rest of the crew, and a luckless ship was becalmed off the coast.

The life they led among these wild spirits it would take days to describe; and he only gave them a few glowing hints of its most striking features, leaving the balance for future occasions; but there was enough to show how savagely they had been treated, how they were forced to work like slaves, and what agonies they suffered mentally, the captain especially on account of his family, over their inability to escape from their masters.

These lawless people were a mixture of Chino-Malay blood, making about as villainous a combination as could be imagined; indeed, Mate Merriwether declared their

YOUR MONEY BACK
IF NOT SATISFIED.

DO YOU SUPPOSE that a company with a capital of $500,000.00, paid in full, and the proud reputation of 37 years of continued success, would make such an offer and not carry it out to the letter?

DO YOU SUPPOSE we would jeopardize our standing with the public and our chances of still greater success by failing to fulfil any promise we make?

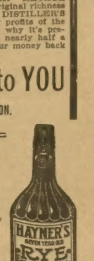
DO YOU SUPPOSE we would make such an offer if we did not have the utmost confidence in the satisfying quality of our goods?

WE KNOW we can please you and save you money, for HAYNER WHISKEY goes direct from our distillery to you, with all its original richness and flavor, carrying a UNITED STATES REGISTERED DISTILLER'S GUARANTEE of PURITY and AGE, and saving you the big profits of the dealers. That's why it's best for medicinal purposes. That's why it's preferred for other uses. That's why we are regularly supplying nearly half a million satisfied customers. That's why YOU should try it. Your money back if you're not satisfied. How could any offer be fairer?

Direct from our Distillery to YOU

SAVES DEALERS' PROFITS—PREVENTS ADULTERATION.

HAYNER WHISKEY



Pure Seven-Year-Old Rye

4 FULL QUARTS $3.20

Express Charges Paid by Us.

OUR OFFER We will send you FOUR FULL QUART BOTTLES OF HAYNER'S SEVEN-YEAR-OLD RYE FOR $3.20 and we will pay the express charges. When you receive the whiskey, try it and if you don't find it all right and as good as you ever used or can buy from anybody else at any price, then send it back at our expense and your $3.20 will be returned to you by next mail. How could an offer be fairer? We take all the risk and stand all the expense, if the goods do not please you. Won't you let us send you a trial order? We ship in a plain sealed case; no marks to show what's inside. If you don't want a quart yourself, join with a friend.

Orders for Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Utah, Washington or Wyoming must be on the basis of 4 QUARTS for $4.00 by EXPRESS PREPAID, or 32 QUARTS for $25.00 by FREIGHT PREPAID.

WRITE OUR NEAREST OFFICE AND DO IT NOW.

ESTABLISHED 1866. DISTILLERY, TROY, O.

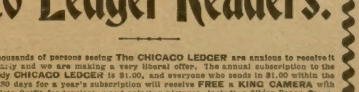
THE HAYNER DISTILLING COMPANY,

St. Louis, Mo. Dayton, Ohio. St. Paul, Minn. Atlanta, Ga.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger. When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

Boys, This Rifle Given Free

Simply send us your name, not one cent of money. We will send you 10 copies of Cheerful Moments, a 32-page illustrated Monthly published in Chicago. Friends of ours, they will gladly give you a month's subscription after they have seen the pretty pictures and read the interesting stories.



Send us the $1.20 collected for the 10 copies and this Handsome Hamilton Rifle and guarantee safe delivery. It is no a toy air gun, but a genuine rifle, made of steel, blue barrel Sporting Rifle, strong and accurate, carries a 22 Cal. Cartridge, and just the thing for Rabbits, Squirrels and other small game. Send your name and address on a Postal Card, and forward the Canvassing Outfit, as that is all you can get on the Cheerful Moments, Address Cheerful Moments, 48 Temple Court, N. Y. City.

To Ledger Readers.

Thousands of persons seeing The CHICAGO LEDGER are anxious to receive it regularly and are making it very liberal offers. The annual subscription to the Weekly CHICAGO LEDGER is $1.00, and everyone who sends in $1.00 within the next 30 days for a year's subscription will receive FREE a KING CAMERA with Complete Outfit for developing and printing pictures, and Finished Silver Paper, Trays, Plates and all necessary Chemicals. We send the CAMERA FREE and prepay charges on it.

Remember you get The LEDGER for a year for $1.00. This is 52 weeks. THE CAMERA is FREE. This is a magnificent offer, allowing you to get all the fine Continued Stories. The offer is good for 30 days from date of this paper.

The CHICAGO LEDGER is distinctly in the line of Progress. As a purveyor of Romance and Entertaining Literature it has no superior. No other American Story Paper illustrates its matter so profusely or with such care; no other periodical devoted to fiction and humor goes to the expense of using color work generally in its pages, as is done in THE LEDGER. Improvement is manifest in the quality of the stories published, and this improvement will continue. The new form of the LEDGER, sixteen pages instead of eight, makes it convenient to preserve the fascinating novels which appear in its pages, both for yourself and your friend's. By sending us $1.00 you get the LEDGER for one year and the KING CAMERA, which is a first-class CAMERA IN ALL RESPECTS. It takes pictures 2 inches by 2 inches in size and is complete and ready for use. Embrace this splendid opportunity at once while the offer is open. Address,

CHICAGO LEDGER, BOYCE BUILDING, CHICAGO

I Save Weak Men.

I Have Discovered the Marvelous Secret of Perpetual Youth and Undying Manly Vigor and I Give It to You Free.

My Mysterious Compound Startles the World With Its Wonderful Cures---With This Marvelous Secret No Man Can Grow Old and It Is My Mission on Earth Henceforth to Bring All Jaded, Worn-Out Men to This Fountain of Youth.

Send No Money—Simply Send Your Name and Address and This Marvelous Compound Will Be Sent to You by Return Mail, Prepaid, Absolutely Free.

I have discovered the marvelous secret of perpetual life and vigor in men. To me it has been given to bring to the fallen, weary, worn-out brothers the knowledge of this priceless boon, and even to the uttermost ends of the earth I send my message of love and peace and good will. Physicians and quacks may scoff and cry "Fake" but I hold them not. My work has begun and I will not be stayed.

After one of his mighty healing power, this vital life spark, this marvelous tonic fluid is known to me alone. It is mine to give to whom I will and my works go before me. Should you ask no man to believe me but I give it to every weak man free to prove my power and it restores him instantly to the strength and powerful vigor of youth. With this marvelous, mysterious compound, which I have discovered, only after a lifetime devoted to search through all the realms of science, and the arcanums of the ancients, it is possible for every weak man to have for his own the glorious manly power, the untiring vigor and the happy life of the patriarchs of Bible times. With this mysterious compound no weak man will ever again be troubled with impotency, vital losses, nightly emissions, spermatorrhoea, varicocele, prematurity, defective power or lack of vital energy.

"No Man Is Lost—There Is a Sure Cure for Every Weak Man."—Dr. Ferris.

Send no money, but as it is my duty, guided by an Unseen Hand—it is my mission on earth—my life work—to lift up the fallen, heal the weak and cure the maimed or undeveloped, and to every man who has lost his vital power or finds it waning, I send my message of love and peace and health. I can save him and I will save him and restore him to many years of happiness and the impetuous vitality and vigorous manhood of perfect health and youth.

Remember, it matters not how old you are, it matters not how you lost your manhood, or when you lost it. It matters not what doctors or soothsayers say. This is no ordinary drug or stimulating method of treatment, but it is the vital spark of life itself, and it matters not how many remedies and methods have failed, I have cured so oddly and instantly renewed the youth of old men. My secret compound never failed to have often instilled into jaded men new vitality, health and strength. For your sake out men I have oft kindled it as instant, and to stay, the sparks of vitality—and now my private address is 1764 Sargent Bldg., 17 Stevens Block, Portland, Oregon, and I urge every weak man to come to me for I will restore to him undying strength, the supreme joy and happiness of perfect manhood. My wondrous discovery has startled the world by its miraculous effects, and I seek not fame nor glory. It suffices me if I may be the humble instrument of Nature's greatest power to bringing all men into the enjoyment of their true manhood and I do it free. In the time allotted to me here on earth I shall do all that in my power lies to give my fellow-men the benefit of this great secret and my reward shall be in the knowledge that I have done unto others as I would that others should do unto me.

CARDS & DICE Perfect Work. Catalog FREE. J. Ireland & Co., Fond du Lac, Wis.
When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

RODS The latest improved; sold under guarantee. Used for fishing, wives, and sweethearts, etc. Or, the one catch. A Beauty. L. A. LOWRY, P.O. Box 1404-B, DENVER, Colo.
When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

J.P. Those suffering from weaknesses which sap the pleasures of life should take Joven's Elite. One box will tell a story of marvelous results. This medicine has more rejuvenating, vitalizing force than has ever been offered. Sent by mail in plain package only on receipt of this advertisement and $1. a

Made by its originators C. I. Hood Co., props. Hood's Sarsaparilla, Lowell, Mass.
When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

equal for treachery and murderous qualities did not exist on the face of the earth, and surely a man who had spent thirty years sailing the seas, from the Arctic regions all the way to Patagonia and New Zealand, associating with almost every known species of mankind, ought to know.

Then he told of several desperate attempts which he and the Captain had made toward escaping, and what hard luck seemed to follow them always, so that they were dragged back into bondage again, and treated more severely on account of having given their captors so much trouble.

Never had Captain Hoxbury entirely left his faith in a kind Providence, which he had been who had raised the despondency of his friend when the situation appeared blackest.

"He's the grandest Christian gentleman on the face of the earth," declared Merriwether, enthusiastically, when he had related how his captain cared for him during a visitation of the plague to the camp, when men and women were dying all around them, and it may be certain that Julian mentally echoed all the praise he showered on the brave one who shrank not from the duty which had devolved upon him.

Finally Merriwether, in the recitation of Bob, who was content now to let Kwang Chow wear, while he himself remained over the story-teller, started to relate the more recent event, as to how he had managed to escape, and by his usual bad luck, fallen once more into the hands of the pirates who pounced down upon him.

"I didn't want to go a bit, without the Captain, but he insisted upon it, for he knew if I got away I could send an expedition to rescue him. You see, he thought that after one last escape, that is at night when we weren't working, and it was impossible for me to get him free, I had a chance to myself to seize a boat and cut for it.

"Finally the time came, and I had to say farewell, and it nigh broke my heart, for you see we had been all that time in each other seven years, and before that always good friends; but he forced me to seize my chance, and I left them, and God knows my heart nearly broke, but, but he would not listen to a refusal, and swore that if I got away nothing under Heaven would keep me from coming back to save him or still stive, or at the worst to avenge.

"I was followed and chased and the tide was in and as you would follow a hare in the scrub; sometimes they thought they had me, when by turning or my trade I'd give the beggars the slip. For days they let me have no chance to get out to the water, but I never showed the white feather, and kept working my boat here and there, trying to find the daytime when I could, skipping here and there in the dark, trying to get by, till at last the time came, and I made a desperate dash for it, as my stock of grub was running low, and another day I knew I should, or my game was busted.

"I was unlucky, for they got wind of me, and this junk followed close at my heels; but through the whole night and into the next day I edged my way, a ghost, always just ahead of their fingers, dodging as only a native boy can, for I knew what I had to do. It was a rare old chase, lad, and only for the big prize I had in my head would the thing immensely; but I was playing for his life and mine, and so you see that took the fun out of it a bit.

"Many times they banged away at me with their long guns and pistols and what they had; but I laid low whenever I saw them getting ready to fire, or dodged around in my sails or the hull of my rickety boat.

"I don't know how I managed it, indeed, for if I could have kept free till dark again I stood some chance of running off; but as misfortune had it, a big sea rose before me—set there came a sudden puff of wind so furious that it struck the junk under, then built at the time to escape a shower of lead, let tore me around and on to it, and the beggarly craft capsized.

"That cooked my goose, to be sure, and it wasn't long ere they yanked me out of the drink, and pounded me with savage delight, for they knew I had somehow would have killed me on the spot, they were that mad, only for the chance of a big ransom and that into a typhoon that promised to send us all to Davy Jones' locker in a hurry.

"Well, that saved me up as you found me, and stuck me in a bunk just as if I was a fixture, and there I have been ever since, and there I've lain ever since, thinking a thousand times my last hour had come, and praying on a little hope when the old hooker kept her sea-legs through it all.

"I knew when you came aboard, but thought it must be some crew retained by some strange freak of fate; and by that time I was too weak to make any such doings; for when a man has only a choice between death and the misery of a slave life among such animals as these, a practical nest, he's ready to accept his billet with resignation.

"And then, dear boys, the joy that nearly overwhelmed me when I heard English spoken at my side. It seemed to me my heart would swell up and burst with delight; yet for the life of me I couldn't imagine who you were; and then again I feared it was only my poor brain wandering, for many times I had thought I heard stops somewhere about the junk, when not a living soul could be within twenty miles of me.

"Now, that's the story in a nutshell, my boys, and you know how I chanced to be in the nasty fix as you found me. Though I hoped to return for my Captain with a British man-o'-war and blow their accursed village to smithereens, still I accept even this chance to rescue him; and the fact that it's his boy who heads the expedition fills my heart with emotion.

"Depend on it we'll make a desperate effort to carry what happiness must come to my old shipmate when he finds that the little chap he was never tired of talking about has grown into a fine fellow, and launched out into the world on his own hook, eh?"

So Mate Merriwether talked and the red crept into Julian's cheeks under his lavish praise, though he was understood that could not see how he merited it; for surely he had done next to nothing as yet, save to start on his search, and according to his mind no decent lad could ever have been contented to remain at home, enjoying the fruits of peace, while it was whispered that his beloved parent was at that hour held as a slave by the unruly spirits haunting the pestilential shores of Southern China.

As yet, of course, their plans were vague enough; but it was understood that could they but gain shelter among the islands where Merriwether had been a slave, and where they might remain in hiding until the time was propitious for them to swoop down on the pirate stronghold and accomplish their work.

Much would have to be left to the man who had been known upon both hands in such a remarkable manner; and as he knew the whole region, after living in the hands of the natives seven long years, he could profit by it to dodge discovery.

Already the very possibility of success thrilled Julian, and in imagination he could see himself in the arms of dear Kwang Chow once more, while he himself received the story-teller, started to relate the more recent event, as to how he had managed to escape, and by his usual bad luck, fallen once more into the hands of the pirates who pounced down upon him.

"I didn't want to go a bit, without the Captain, but he insisted upon it, for he knew if I got away I could send an expedition to rescue him. You see, he thought that after one last escape, that is at night when we weren't working, and it was impossible for me to get him free, I had a chance to myself to seize a boat and cut for it.

"Finally the time came, and I had to say farewell, and it nigh broke my heart, for you see we had been all that time in each other seven years, and before that always good friends; but he forced me to seize my chance, and I left them, and God knows my heart nearly broke, but, but he would not listen to a refusal, and swore that if I got away nothing under Heaven would keep me from coming back to save him or still stive, or at the worst to avenge.

"I was followed and chased and the tide was in and as you would follow a hare in the scrub; sometimes they thought they had me, when by turning or my trade I'd give the beggars the slip. For days they let me have no chance to get out to the water, but I never showed the white feather, and kept working my boat here and there, trying to find the daytime when I could, skipping here and there in the dark, trying to get by, till at last the time came, and I made a desperate dash for it, as my stock of grub was running low, and another day I knew I should, or my game was busted.

"I was unlucky, for they got wind of me, and this junk followed close at my heels; but through the whole night and into the next day I edged my way, a ghost, always just ahead of their fingers, dodging as only a native boy can, for I knew what I had to do. It was a rare old chase, lad, and only for the big prize I had in my head would the thing immensely; but I was playing for his life and mine, and so you see that took the fun out of it a bit.

"Many times they banged away at me with their long guns and pistols and what they had; but I laid low whenever I saw them getting ready to fire, or dodged around in my sails or the hull of my rickety boat.

"I don't know how I managed it, indeed, for if I could have kept free till dark again I stood some chance of running off; but as misfortune had it, a big sea rose before me—just there came a sudden puff of wind so furious that it struck the junk under, then built at the time to escape a shower of lead, let tore me around and on to it, and the beggarly craft capsized.

"That cooked my goose, to be sure, and it wasn't long ere they yanked me out of the drink, and pounded me with savage delight, for they knew I had somehow would have killed me on the spot, they were that mad, only for the chance of a big ransom and that into a typhoon that promised to send us all to Davy Jones' locker in a hurry.

"Well, that saved me up as you found me, and stuck me in a bunk just as if I was a fixture, and there I have been ever since, and there I've lain ever since, thinking a thousand times my last hour had come, and praying on a little hope when the old hooker kept her sea-legs through it all.

"I knew when you came aboard, but thought it must be some crew retained by some strange freak of fate; and by that time I was too weak to make any such doings; for when a man has only a choice between death and the misery of a slave life among such animals as these, a practical nest, he's ready to accept his billet with resignation.

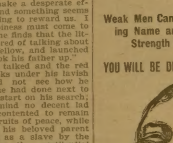
"And then, dear boys, the joy that nearly overwhelmed me when I heard English spoken at my side. It seemed to me my heart would swell up and burst with delight; yet for the life of me I couldn't imagine who you were; and then again I feared it was only my poor brain wandering, for many times I had thought I heard stops somewhere about the junk, when not a living soul could be within twenty miles of me.

"Now, that's the story in a nutshell, my boys, and you know how I chanced to be in

Gives Instant Vigor.

Weak Men Can Have It Free by Sending Name and Address — Imparts Strength and Vigor for Life.

YOU WILL BE DELIGHTED THE FIRST DAY.



"Feels So Good to Be My Old Self Again."

How any man may quickly cure himself after years of suffering from sexual weakness, lost vitality, nervousness, varicocele, etc., and enlarge small weak organs to full size and vigor, simply send your name and address to Dr. Knapp Medical Co., 2201 Hull Bldg., Detroit, Mich., and they will gladly send the free receipt with full directions so any man may easily cure himself at home.

If you are not troubled with sexual weakness don't write. But if you are weak, have shrunken, undeveloped organs, write them at once, as the remedy will give instant relief. Don't delay, for you are sure absolutely from the very start. This is certainly a most generous offer, and you should certainly take advantage of it, as you have taken from their daily mail, shows what, men think of Dr. Knapp's generosity.

"Dear Sirs:—The result could not have been better. I am now a strong man, free of returning life, an exquisite experience of renewed power. The first day I took your treatment and I cannot withhold an expression of gratitude to you. Long have you led me to the way of restoration, strength and vigor. Everything looks bright and hope offers more than I ever supposed it would. God bless you for your noble work. I am a weakened man than your priceless receipt.

DON'T MARRY, DOCTOR or consult, "Don't Be a Fool" but first clearly what's best by old or Ricketts' Light on Wisdom, Sex, Health, disease, love, marriage and parentage. Tells what you'd adore, but say like to. 10 pages illustrated, 25cents; but to introduce it we send one only 10c. postpaid. Address PUB. DEPT. 10, THE HULL HOUSE CO., 120 East 34th Street, New York
When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

FREE TO WEAK MEN

A DISCOVERY OF A REMEDY HAS BEEN MADE THAT RESTORES LOST MANHOOD AND GIVES MAN THE VITALITY OF A LION.

ONE WEEK'S TRIAL PACKAGE SENT FREE TO ALL MEN WHO WRITE FOR IT.

Regenerative Tablets is the only recognized positive and permanent cure for Lost Manhood in all its many forms.

It is scientifically prepared by the best chemists in the world. The reputation of the institution is such, that all physicians know when they stand sponsor for a remedy, that remedy must be of the highest standard. And when upon their reputation they make the statement that Regenerative Tablets will cure all cases of Lost Manhood, Spermatorrhoea, Varicocele, Atrophy of the testes, loss of the nerve or sexual organs, a cure must be positive and permanent. The Company will send every person who is suffering from these diseases a week's, treatment absolutely free. These is but one test of genuine medicine and that is the results which are obtained by its use; if it cures the disease for which it is prepared it is a true remedy. This is the test by which the Fallopia Lynn Co., wish their one week free treatment to be tried. After using Regenerative Tablets one week, the sufferer will find new vigor in his organs, a new force in his muscles; new blood in his veins; new ambition; a new man in vitality, health and appearance. Regenerative Tablets has a peculiarly grateful effect and the patient feels the benefit after the first day's use. It goes direct to the seat of the trouble, no matter of how long standing, giving strength to the organs where it is needed. This marvelous tonic Regenerative Tablets, is the greatest step toward the opposite sex; cures all the ills and troubles that are peculiar to them; it prevents all overwork and nervous stress, all of which result in premature loss of strength and memory; emissions, impotency and varicocele. Regenerative Tablets will effect a cure at any age, there is no case that it will not cure permanently except where epilepsy or insanity has already been reached. Fallopia Lynn Co., makes no restrictions, every person who writes will be sent a week's treatment absolutely free and postpaid, carefully wrapped in a plain package, with no printing on it to show what it contains and they have received thousands of letters from people all over the country telling of the most astonishing cures made by Regenerative Tablets. Their one week free offer is genuine, and no embarrassing questions asked. Write to-day to the Fallopia Lynn Co., 313 Burlington Building, St. Louis, Mo., and receive the week's treatment free; their book which is also free and sent with the free treatment will explain how to take the treatment in private and cure yourself at home.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

her pathway, heading into the southwest, just as Merriwether would have wished, her tiller lashed, and the soft breeze filling her queer matting sails.

Julian spoke of the land which he was sure he had sighted just before the finding of the imprisoned mate, and Merriwether assured them that in all probability, judging from what he could gather about their course, and the reckoning taken by the young skipper, this must be the archipelago of which he had spoken, consisting of a number of small islands, serving as buffers to the larger one upon which the pirates had their nest.

If they kept straight on the chances were they could gain the shelter of these wooded islands, with their narrow and tortuous channels between, ere the coming of dawn observed their coming to keen eyes ever on the lookout upon the tower of observation used by the allies to spy out expected prey. Of course, everything depended on the wind, which might prove fickle, and failing them utterly, bring about a state of affairs that would ruin their carefully laid plans. It would not be the first time that same want of a breeze had laid a vessel open to attack in these dangerous latitudes; and as Merriwether said, the ghastly ribs of many a brave craft whitened upon the sands of those same islands, while the crews had never been heard of again by those who waited aimlessly in distant ports for news.

The ex-mate was in the midst of a description of the surroundings of the Hawk's Nest, as he called the collection of huts and tents forming the village of the man-catcarers, when there came a shrill outcry that electrified each and every one in the cabin, so that there was a general scrambling to gain their feet, and Tressie clutched the arm of her protector, girl fashion.

There was something strangely familiar about the racket that caused Bob to throw up his hands and exclaim, dramatically:

"It's that old nuisance, Wang Chow, and he's got 'em again. Another devil has appeared to his vision, and this time perhaps it may be the genuine article," was what he spouted, but Julian began to have fears that it might be something of a more serious nature threatening them.

This thrilling story of youthful adventures in the far East will be continued next week. Our patterns and cameras are free to all subscribers. Please note our announcement on pages thirteen and fifteen.

Old, Old Story.

Once upon a time there was a lovesick frog who would a-wooing go; so he dusted off his garments, and proceeded to call on a giddy young frogess who dwelled in Puddingville. After swapping some small talk and exchanging weather views he finally got down to business and asked her to double up with him as his leading lady for the purpose of doing a life stunt on the continuous circuit.

"And what if I should refuse?" queried the tantalizing female, after the manner peculiar to her sex.

"Then, darling," replied his frogship, "there is nothing left for me to do but croak."

Moral—And so they were married and lived unhappily ever after.

MEN; BE STRONG!

PROF. JULIEN LABORDE, DISCOVERER OF "CALTHOS."

You Can Be Cured of NERVOUS DEBILITY and LOST MANHOOD BY "CALTHOS"

Full 5 Days Treatment ABSOLUTELY FREE By Sealed Mail.

No C.O.D. or PRESCRIPTION SCHEME

For years the cry has gone up from hundreds and thousands of men, young and old, for a remedy that would rid them of the terrible results of early follies or excesses, or of the overwork and worry that sap the physical vitality.

The medical profession of this country seemed powerless to cope with the appalling and disastrous disease that is sapping the very life blood from thousands of victims of youthful indiscretion.

PROF. LABORDE'S WONDERFUL DISCOVERY.

It remained for the eminent French authority, Prof. Julien Laborde, to conduct scientific inquiry into the cause and cure of Lost Vitality, Sexual Weakness, Nervousness, and Insomnia, and the world today acknowledges the supremacy of the wonderful remedy "CALTHOS."

The Von Mohl Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, recognizing the commercial value of Prof. Laborde's discovery, secured the sole American rights for "CALTHOS," and from the agency thousands of men who suffered from sexual diseases and enfeebling weaknesses soon knew the happiness of health and perfect vitality.

THE VON MOHL CO'S. REMARKABLE OFFER.

We are not authorized, by The Von Mohl Company, to announce that every man who sends simply his name and address will be supplied absolutely free by sealed mail, with five-days full treatment of "CALTHOS." This is no C. O. D. or Prescription Scheme, and there are no conditions attached to the offer. You need not give humiliating details regarding your trouble. You need not send one cent of money—not even a postage stamp. All The Von Mohl Company desires is that you give the remedy a fair and thorough trial, and they are willing to stand all the expenses connected with the trial to prove the faith in its merits.

POWER OF "CALTHOS" PROVED.

The first day you take the treatment you will be benefited. The second day you will feel the improvement. The third day you will note an increase of strength. The fourth day will show a gain both mentally and physically. The fifth day you will feel like a new man. Early Decay, Wasting Power of Sexual Decline and Errors, Nervousness, Varicocele, Impotency, Night Sweats, Pollutions of the Nocturnal Emissions, Lost Manhood, and all the Wretchedness resulting therefrom generally be cured by "CALTHOS," but if the disease has progressed to the stage marked by the symptoms of Epilepsy, Consumption or Insanity, we cannot promise complete recovery.

PROMPT ACTION IMPORTANT.

As you value your health, your happiness, your very life, do not delay beginning treatment. The Von Mohl Company has thousands of testimonials on file from persons who have taken the treatment, including numerous roadmaster power.

The Company does not publish testimonials, and your correspondence is sacredly confidential.

Many who take out the Five Days Treatment write that they are entirely restored.

If the men of the country, your friends, as well as for your own best interests, write to The Von Mohl Company for the Five Days' treatment, sent in plain sealed package, at once.

The Von Mohl Co., 265 B, Prepositions in the United States. Cincinnati, O.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger

Beautiful Patterns Free---An Unparalleled Offer.

The patterns shown below are furnished us by one of the best, if not the best, pattern manufacturers in New York. They come out in the very latest styles, and are unequalled for accuracy in fit, simplicity and the most economical of material. They sell from the stores from twenty-five to fifty cents each. Full instructions are printed on every pattern. These combined subscriptions to the CHICAGO LEDGER for 50 cents and any TWO of these patterns FREE. Six months' subscription to the CHICAGO LEDGER for 50 cents and FIVE of these patterns FREE. This offer is without equal. If you see what you will take advantage of it at once.

REMEMBER, to avoid mistakes, you must first give the number of the Pattern wanted—second, do not fail to give your measure for waist, or waist measure if skirt is wanted—third, write your name and address plainly—fourth, inclose 50 cts. Also, do not fail to enclose money.

PATTERN DEPT., CHICAGO LEDGER, CHICAGO, ILL.

4491 WOMANS BERTHA 32-36-40 BUST.
4486 MORNING JACKET 32-40 BUST.
4497 THREE QUARTER COAT 32-40 BUST.
4489 BOX PLAITED WALKING SKIRT 22-30 WAIST.
4498 WOMANS WAIST 32-40 BUST
4479 GIRL'S COSTUME 8-14 YRS.
4488 BLOUSE WAIST 32-40 BUST.
4485 MISSES SEVEN GORED TUCKED SKIRT 12-16 YRS.
4492 GIRLS COSTUME 8-14 YRS.
4480 BLOUSE WAIST 32-40 BUST.
4493 FIVE GORED SKIRT 22-32 WAIST.
4499 GIRLS COSTUME 8-12 YRS.

A Trial Box Offered Men

Great Parisian Method That Cures Diseases of Men Without Taking Medicine into the Stomach and in Their Own Home—Let Every Man Send For It.

THE PARIS MEDICATED CRAYON

PLEASANT, SOOTHING AND HEALING

By a wonderful method recently discovered by the Parisian physicians, and now for the first time introduced in America, it is possible for any man no matter how bad his case, or how long he has been the victim of young manhood, to obtain a trial box of the Paris Medicated Crayon, entirely free, and if you will fill out and send us the following coupon we will forward you a trial box of the remedy by mail, prepaid, to every man sending the coupon (and the regular price is $1. Sherman & Co., Box 1909, Buffalo, N. Y.), and in a wonderfully quick time lost vitality, emaciation, premature decay, nervousness, blood poison, unnatural discharges, irritation and enlargement of the prostate gland, and all bladder and urinary diseases of men. It is the only method known to science that will electrify the body, root and branch, every vestige of disease, and from that day on the unhappy man's cure is certain.

Write to Dr. Sherman & Co., Buffalo, N. Y., Box 1909. We offer you trial box of the Paris Medicated Crayon free. Don't send us a penny. Don't write us a long address. It is a very simple matter. Just write DR. SHERMAN & CO., Buffalo, N. Y., Box 1909, Buffalo, N. Y., and say: "Please send me your free trial box of the Paris Medicated Crayon, as per your offer in the Chicago Ledger." Don't write us a long letter. Don't tell us your symptoms. Don't write us anything but the above words. Don't send us a penny. Don't write us a long address. Just write the above words, and address them to DR. SHERMAN & CO., Buffalo, N. Y., Box 1909, Buffalo, N. Y., and you will receive by return mail, in a plain, sealed wrapper, the trial box of the Paris Medicated Crayon, and our book, which explains all about it. Don't delay. Write today.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

OPIUM and Liquor Habit cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till cured. Write DR. J. E. STEPHENS CO., Dept. B 7 Lebanon, Ohio.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

FREE FARMS

The Free Homestead Law of 1862 secures each person wishing a farm Free. Send 25 cents for new book containing the new homestead law and the names and locations of every United States Land Office. This book tells just where to go for free farms and exactly what to do when you get there. Also tells about the Government Irrigation Projects in Arizona, California, Colorado, Florida, Idaho, Kansas, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, Utah, South Dakota, Washington, Wisconsin and Wyoming. You will find this book worth many times its cost. Address, with stamps or coin, the Secretary of Washington, the Father of the West, or for first farms in the north. Write at once inclosing 25 cents. W. A. WASHINGTON & CO., 710 Lewis Block, Pittsburg, Pa.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

MEN AND WOMEN

CURE YOURSELF! The Big G is a harmless remedy for Gonorrhea, Gleet, Spermatorrhea, Whites, unnatural discharges, or any inflammations, irritation or ulcerations of mucous membranes. Not astringent. SOLD BY DRUGGISTS or sent in plain wrapper, by express, prepaid, for $1.00, or 3 bottles, $2.75. Circular sent on request.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

I FORE TELL 12 LITTLE Albums in Water, Fortunes, and PICTURE of Future Husband or Wife, Dream Book, and 100 Games of Cards, all for 10c. 3 PACKS for 25c. Agents Wanted. Big Profits. Send 10c. for Sample. ACME CARD CO., Box 1, Clinton, Mass.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

MAGIC DIP NEEDLE FOR LOCATING GOLD AND SILVER. Every Miner Needs One. A. B. MARSH, PALMYRA, PA.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

BLOOD POISON

Has never found absolutely unknown to the profession. Permanent cures in 15 to 35 days. We refund money if we do not cure. We can be referred to by any bank in this nation and the same guaranteed, with those who prefer to come here we will contract to pay railroad fare and hotel bills, and make no charge if we fail to cure. If you have taken mercury or iodide potash and still have aches and pains, mucous patches in mouth, sore throat, pimples, copper colored spots, ulcers on any part of the body, hair and eyebrows falling out, it is this SECONDARY BLOOD POISON that we guarantee to cure. We solicit the most obstinate cases and challenge the world for a case we cannot cure. This disease has always baffled the skill of the most eminent physicians. For many years we have made a specialty of treating this disease with our magic remedy, S. S. S. Cures guaranteed. Capital, $500,000. Reference, Widest Circulation and Strictest Investigation. We have no branch offices. Always our full address, as below:

COOK REMEDY COMPANY, 1730 Masonic Temple, Chicago, Illinois.

COOK REMEDY CO.

When Writing Mention The Chicago Ledger.

BOYS WANTED TO SELL THE BLADE AND LEDGER.

We want a boy in every town to act as agent. We start you without asking a cent in advance. Fill out the blank below and we will send you a bundle of BLADES AND LEDGERS by mail, also report blanks, instructions, and certificate of money. You report each week, paying only for papers you sell. You keep 2 cents out of every 5 cents sale and send us 3 cents. In this way you can earn a nice sum each week. No experience necessary. We send full instructions so you can begin at once. Tear out the coupon below and send it in.

W. D. BOYCE CO., Boyce Building, Chicago.

GENTLEMEN: I would like to be your agent. agree to pay you for all papers I sell, less my commission, I also agree to report every week. Please send me a bundle of papers, report blanks, etc Yours truly,

Name.....

Street..... Town.....

Date..... State.....

I CURE FITS

When I say I cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my Infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office.

DR. W. H. PEEKE, F. D., 4 CEDAR ST., N.Y.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

I WILL TELL Your Fortune by Cards, Business, Marriage, with Name of Future Husband or Wife, Number of Children, Lucky Days, &c. Send 10c. and stamp. MRS. M. A. MERRITT, Box 1, Lebanon, Ohio.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

TAPE-WORM CHILLICOTHE, MISSOURI. DR. E. E. SMITH, BOX 1, MEDICAL.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

WOULD YOU KNOW YOUR Future? If so, send your name and address and 10c. to Prof. Thomack of Tuckahoe and he will write you a true and reliable reading of your future. Don't delay. Address Prof. Thomack, Box 1, Tuckahoe, N. Y.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

FAT FOLKS REDUCED 20 lbs a month. No starving; no sickness. Anyone can make remedy at home. Sent for 50c. and stamp. Dr. Edwin Chamberlain, 39 Dey St., Room 36, New York City.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

WANTED Man to learn barber trade; $60.00 monthly paid graduates. Few weeks completes. Catalog free. Moler Barber College, Chicago, Ill. Moler Barber College, New York City, Newark, N. J., Kansas City, Mo., New Orleans, La., or Toledo, O.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

FREE GOLD WATCH This modern watch with American movement, fitted fully warranted for 25 years, stem wind and set, handsome engraved case, guaranteed to keep correct time, will be given absolutely Free to any lady who will write us at once. It is given absolutely Free to introduce our line of high grade Jewelry. We manufacture all of the watches we sell and our prices are the lowest. Write today and we send Jewelry with large Premium List postpaid. When sold return our Premium List, watch and we will send you watch free as per agreement. Address, THE CHICAGO WATCH AND DIAMOND CO., 92, 94, 96, 98, 100, 102, 104 Monroe Street, Chicago, Ill.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

2 Reasons Why the SOUTHWEST

Offers Unequaled Healthful Climate and Wonderful Productiveness to Investors

CHEAPER LANDS. UNEQUALED PROSPERITY.

Go and See the Country for Yourself.

Low Rate Excursions on the first and third Tuesdays of each month.

Write for Descriptive Literature to

"KATY," - St. Louis, Mo.

When Writing Mention Chicago Ledger.

It rests with you whether you continue the nerve-killing tobacco habit, with its many attendant ills, or cast it off forever. Don't suffer nervousness, nervousness, impotency, constipation, paralysis, the blood, tongue, throat, stomach, liver, kidneys, bladder, lungs, heart, stomach, and many other organs of the body. Don't be a slave to the habit. Don't be a slave to the habit. Don't be a slave to the habit